Byrnes, With Othman Among Those Present, Holds Parley

By Frederick C. Othman (United Press Staff Correspondent) Washington, Jan. 2 (UP)—Fog billowed around the White House and, if you ask me, inside the noisings of the capital correspondents as they trudged through the rain to the executive offices. It was noon, New Year's day. Calling a press conference on the morning after the night before was a brutal thing to do, but Jimmy Byrnes apologized handsomely. Having borrowed a pale green conference room from President Roosevelt to make public his annual report on war mobilization and reconversion, he sat at the end of a long mahogany table with eyeglasses glistening and face a glowing pink.

The war mobilization and reconversion director was one Washingtonian who had no hangover. He was sympathetic to those who did. His report was nearly half an inch thick and crammed with charts showing how America was producing for war. It was as interesting and important document and I think it would be well worth your time to turn to the front page of this paper and read about it.

Byrnes said he certainly was sorry he had to make it public on a holiday. The reporters began asking him questions and I got to watching his eyebrows. They are what the acting trade calls eloquent eyebrows. They move around and the ends of 'em curl up or down, according to what he's thinking about.

When he's talking about R-F athletes, for instance, the eyebrows slant down and Byrnes looks sore. He said he'd been to a football game where he'd seen some R-F stalwarts endeavor to prove they were physically fit. He said if a footballer had a punctured eardrum, but could go into a huddle and hear the signals of the captain, then he ought to be able to hear the orders of an army sergeant.

"And some of them are color blind," he said. "Well, they don't seem to get mixed up on the color of their sweaters. As for those with tricky knees, if they don't get tricky on the football field, they probably won't in Verdun."

That, Byrnes said, is why he'd suggested that selective service re-examine 4-F athletes for possible army service. I thought the sports editors would be on hand to query him at length about his shutting down horse race tracks as of tomorrow, but there wasn't a peep about his ban on the ponies. One reporter did ask him whether he intended to eliminate all professional sports for the duration and he said:

"I have not considered such a thing." Somebody else brought up the broadcast of a radio oracle who'd said the night before that Byrnes would shut down the nation's night clubs as a waste of manpower.

Byrnes said he had not considered that, either, though the war manpower people did get tough with the proprietor of a new hot spot in an unspecified city who had opened his doors with a staff of 103 waiters, cigaret girls, and chorines.

The mobilization director also said he'd have a happier new year if congress would enact a universal service law. His eyebrows sloped down and he added that he didn't have much hope. The correspondents filed out into the fog then with his best wishes for the new year and copies of his report. There was no holiday eggnog for them; only statistics.

pork except a few cuts, all lamb except utility grades and some forequarter cuts, beef and veal liver, and most sausage products and canned meats.

Although a loud cry of pain may have been your first reaction to the announcement of the increase in point values of butter from 20 to 24 points a pound, this action was taken to bring about a more even distribution. Areas far from production centers were not getting their fair share. Butter will now be "spread" more evenly throughout the country, if perhaps a little thinner in some spots.

To prevent a drain on stocks of food available for civilians in 1945, the government has cancelled all red and blue stamps except current ones, thus insuring rationing on a fair basis, rather than first-come-first-served. Stamps which are no longer good are red stamps A8 through Z8 and A5 through P5, and blue stamps A8 through Z8 and A5 through W5, all in war ration book IV. These should be destroyed immediately, to prevent their possible diversion into the black market. In addition, sugar stamps 30, 31 and 33 are cancelled along with home-canning sugar stamp no. 40. These also should be destroyed.

To partially compensate for the return of most meats to rationing, the OPA has announced that red stamps will now be validated at the rate of 50 points a ration period instead of 30, as previously. Red stamps which are now good for the purchase of meats and fats are Q5 through X5. Blue stamps X5 through Z5 and A2 through G2 are valid for buying processed fruits and vegetables. And sugar stamp no. 34 is still good for five pounds of sugar. However, use your sugar supply with caution, as your next five pounds, stamp for which will become valid February 1, will have to last three months instead of two and a half.

Senior hosts assisting were: Eugene Aekley, Clarence Boyd, Arthur Brinson and Craig Coyner.

Mrs. America Meets the War

Tightening of war-time food controls will mean stricter budgeting of ration points for Mrs. America in the new year. Food requirements of the armed forces in 1945 will be greater than was at one time anticipated, which means that there will be less for the home front. The return of several items to rationing was necessary to assure every civilian getting his fair share.

Blue ration stamps are going to figure more prominently in family marketing, as they will be required when buying canned asparagus, green or wax beans, corn, spinach and peas. Canned tomatoes, of course, have been rationed right along. And when it comes to spending red points, the housewife must remember that she will need them for buying almost all meats... that is, all cuts and grades of beef, all
