Jap Bomb Strikes U. S. Navy Carrier

The cagey Nips, often under-rated as fliers, score a direct hit on flight deck of U. S. Navy carrier, setting fire to planes and blasting gaping hole in deck. Fire-fighting crews pour streams of water and chemicals to prevent spread of flames. This dramatic scene is from new Navy-OVI motion picture, "Brought to Action," which depicts sea and air battles against Japs in Pacific. U. S. Navy photo.

Battle of Bulge To Lengthen War

By Boyd D. Lewis (United Press War Correspondent)

Paris, Jan. 17 (AP)—Adolf Hitler's desperate thrust into the Ardennes failed in all its major objectives, but it chewed up American map, armor, and supplies that had been massed for an offensive of their own and prolonged the war anywhere from one to six months.

This sober judgment of the German offensive is based on information obtained from reliable sources while covering three army fronts—the seventh, first, and ninth—during the month following German Marshal Karl von Rundstedt's breakthrough.

To weigh the results, Hitler's aims first must be considered.

A captured member of Hitler's escort guard said the Fuehrer addressed a conference of army generals, including Von Rundstedt, Dec. 3 and called for his forces to reach the Meuse river in three days and Antwerp in three weeks.

Plans Are Ambitious

The capture of Antwerp, Hitler said, would cut off 38 allied divisions north of the break-through area and deal a death blow to the American expeditionary force. He even hoped one of the allies would be knocked out of the European war.

Rundstedt was to smash through with such terrific speed that vast allied gasoline and supply dumps would be overrun, enabling the Germans to feed off their booty. Liege and Namur were to fall like ripe plums, and the race northwest to Antwerp was to be aided in its final phase by a coup de grace delivered from northern Holland, where forces drained off from Norway and other sources were massed.

G. I. Vets Marvel At Fresh Milk

1368 Men Arrive From Battlefield; Get First Home Sights

By HELEN CAMP NEW YORK, Jan. 13 (AP)—Today 1368 men are home from the battlefields in Europe. They came from Germany, Belgium, France, Italy, Sicily—and they are on their way to Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah and north, south and west. The first days of those 1368 men had spent on American soil in three weeks from six months to a year—was a crazy kaleidescopic of sights, sounds and of emotions. The 1368 men comprised the largest group of non-casualties yet to be sent back from the 12th air zone. They were from any army group and had served with the first three captured swastika flags. They tossed European coins onto the docks. They whistled at pretty girls, plain girls, any girls they hoped M. P.'s. They shouted at the band for live music. And they drank milk and marveled at the miracle of milk.

that milk is the favorite G. I. drink—and how they've missed it overseas!
We at home should better appreciate its goodness.

general broadcasts, at least for some hours.

"Attention! Attention! Warsaw is captured," the broadcast was quoted. "Formations of the red army and the Polish army occupied Warsaw, capital of the Polish republic." It was repeated three times and followed by the Polish national anthem, according to BBC and a United States FCC report to the same effect.

Whether or not Warsaw already had fallen, all reports of the massive campaign on the eastern front made it plain that the doom of the martyred capital was sealed.

Southwest of Warsaw, two great Soviet armies were moving across the frozen plains on the direct road to Berlin, and north of it the nazis acknowledged that the Russians had smashed the defenses along the east bank of the Vistula and on the Narow.

Lines Shattered
A nazis communique said 40 Russian infantry divisions and several tank corps—half a million men by conservative estimate—blasted "deep breaches" in the defenses north of Warsaw and "through the steadfastness of German soldiers who defend themselves in their positions to their last breath" were checked at Modlin, fortress city 18 miles northwest of Warsaw on the Vistula; Naslesk, 27 miles northwest of Warsaw; and Cienchanow, 48 miles northwest of Warsaw.

The greatest land battle of the war was waged on an ever-widening front from the Carpathian foothills to within 20 miles of Warsaw, and Berlin accounts said major Russian forces also were attacking to the north in a double-barrelled drive to envelop and wipe out the nazis military base of East Prussia.

Nazis Fall Back
Everywhere the Germans were retreating toward their frontier in a general retreat that at some points was taking on the appearance of a rout. Five days after the start of the Soviet winter offensive, German casualties were running into tens of thousands, with the enemy sacrificing entire divisions in a desperate effort to slow the Russian advance long enough to permit formation of a new defense line.

Elaborate fortifications that had been building since the nazi occupation of Poland more than five years ago collapsed in a matter of hours as the whole Soviet front below Warsaw moved eastward in giant strides.

The First White Russian army under Marshal Gregory Zuhov, Premier Josef Stalin's military deputy, hammered out the most spectacular gains through the German flank resting on Warsaw.
