GOOSE RARE IN OREGON SPENDING WINTER HERE

Visiting in Bend with water-fowl of the Mirror pond this winter is one of Oregon's rarest migrants, Ross's goose, a bird whose nesting place, now known to be in the isolated interior of Alaska, remained undiscovered until recent years, it was learned here today.

Presence of the strange bird on the Mirror pond was called to the attention of H. H. Sheldon, local naturalist and photographer, by Charles H. Bishop, former city park gardener. Sheldon studied the migrant and positively identified it as Ross's goose, named after Bernard R. Ross, British naturalist with Hudson's Bay company in early days.

Sheldon reports that Ross's goose is somewhat similar in general appearance to the lesser snow goose, but is much smaller in size. Ross's goose is about the size of a mallard duck, but is white except for the wings, which have black tips and gray patches, and in some of the specimens the neck and breast are washed or stained with rusty orange. It is also distinguished from the lesser snow goose by its roughened warty area at the base of the bill.

ed on the basis of two specimens, it is pointed out in "Birds of Oregon," by Gabrielson and Jewett. The first was reported by Charles E. Bendire, in 1877. This specimen was obtained on Silvie's river. "It appears to be a rare species, and was shot out of a flock of 12 by Sgt. Kennedy of my company," Captain Bendire reported in that distant day. This specimen is now in the collection of the Museum of Comparative Zoology, in Cambridge, Mass.

The second Oregon specimen was from Adel, in Lake county, and was killed on November 6, 1921, by W. S. Wyble, of Adel, and presented to Stanley G. Jewett.

Naturalists say that it is evident that Oregon lies to the west of the main flight line of this little goose, which regularly stops at Great Falls, Mont., "for lunch," then continues south to winter in the northern Sacramento valley. The Bend visitor, which probably dropped from a migrating flock this past fall, appears to have suffered a wing impairment, and will probably make its home here through the entire winter. Its associates on the Mirror pond are the speckle breasts, another species of geese.

Merchants Bar Japanese Trade

Hood River, Ore., Jan. 18 (UP)—Hood River today was the second community in Oregon where merchants have barred Japanese trade, nine businessmen posting "No Jap Trade" signs at their stores.

Several merchants at Gresham have taken the same means of discouraging the return of Japanese to the Pacific coast.

Members of the Hood River American Legion post pointed out that the store proprietors in Hood River were supporting the legion stand and announced that probably more stores would follow suit. The legion also circulated petitions seeking names of those who were "100 per cent back of the legion's stand."

In opposition to the move, the Odell, Ore., community church in Hood River valley passed a resolution asking the American Legion to restore the names of 16 Japanese-American soldiers expunged from a legion roll of honor.

Iron rails, laid in 1826 on a four-mile railroad in Quincy, Mass., to haul granite blocks, were the first metal rails replacing wood to be used in America.

BEST BY triple TEST***

* We're talking about suits . . . not a soft drink . . . in case you were confused. Couldn't resist that headline, though, because it fits these suits perfectly . . . like they'll fit you.

Triple Test Worsteds are their name . . . for the sound reason that the fine looking material in each had to pass three stringent, scientific tests: first, a test for style, then one for quality, and finally one for value. And after carefully examining these Triple Tests we think you'll agree that they're the best buys in town (or out, for that matter).
