Radar Training Work Stressed

Enlistments in the navy's radar training program have shown a tremendous increase during the past month and much of the credit should be given to school officials in this district, declares Chief Specialist Paul Connet of the Central Oregon navy recruiting station, Bend.

Superintendents, principals and instructors deserve praise, according to the recruiter, for counseling students with an aptitude for mathematics and technical subjects and then assisting them in obtaining this training preparatory to taking the qualifying test for the radar training program.

The fact that such a large volume of applicants is being qualified for the training is proof that it is not necessary to have had practical experience in radio work in order to qualify. The Eddy test, which determines whether an applicant has the aptitude, stresses mathematics and general science, with electricity, physics, shop work and radio theory being of secondary importance.

Training Vital
Records reveal that a person with a solid foundation of mathematics and general science has an excellent chance of being accepted as a candidate and of successfully passing the ten-month course of advanced radio and electronics embraced by the training.

So vital is the need for radar technicians that the plan of voluntary induction into the navy has been reopened to men between 18 and 37, inclusive, who can meet all requirements and who have had their pre-induction physical examination.

Seventeen-year-olds and men from 38 to 50½, inclusive, may enlist directly if they can qualify.

The trumpeter swan has a windpipe unlike that of other swans; it makes a vertical loop over a lump in the breast bone and emerges from a separate opening.
