Public Health Nursing Day Designated to Honor Nurses

Urging a better understanding between public health nurses and the people they serve, Mayor A. T. Nebergall of Bend has issued a proclamation calling for the observance today of national public health nursing day. Theme being observed is "Know Your Public Health Nurse—who she is, what she does." States the announcement designating the day, first of its kind observed in this country: "The theme was chosen by the national public health nursing day committee partly because the results of a poll taken recently in several cities and towns indicated that few people had any idea of the function or scope of the public health nurse. The people interviewed regarded her as just a nurse who drives around in the county car and takes children to clinics, or who gives nursing care to sick people who are too poor to go to hospitals. Many of them had never heard of the public health nurse. It is the desire of the committee to spotlight several points for emphasis: That the visiting nurse, district nurse, city or county nurse, school nurse and industrial nurse are all public health nurses; that the public health nurse is a registered, graduate nurse expected to have special preparation for teaching health; and that public health nursing service has a thorough preventive and educational, as well as remedial, side. The national organization for public health nursing feels that the results of intensive and large-scale physical examinations, part of the pre-induction program of the armed forces, have pointed up the value of adequate public

The last stamp-free sale was held last July when approximately 5,785,000 pairs were sold. Airplane stamp three, under present OPA plans, will have to last consumers at least eight months, rather than the expected six months. Airplane stamps one and two are also still valid.
