Gleemen Please Audience In First Concert of Season A large audience braved last night's snowstorm to hear the first public concert given locally by the Bend Gleemen, an aggregation of 16 tuxedo-clad, precision-trained tenors, baritones and basses who swept through a difficult repertoire that started with a gentle melody by Charles Wakefield Cadman and culminated in a finale in swing time that lifted the audience right out of the seats.

The finale, "Ride the Chariot," negro spiritual featuring solos by Charles Corkett and C. Dale Robbins, combined the most striking features of an old-time camp meeting stomp with hot fire. In an unexpected display of versatility, the Gleemen rendered it a cappella.

Ralph Bailey, clown—all good Gleemen carry a clown—brought down the house during the first of two encores, "Nut Brown Ale," when, assisted by Wayne Hamilton, he put on a comedy pantomime.

While the entire program was enthusiastically received stand-out numbers were "Elegy," by Massenet, featuring Charles Corkett, tenor; "On the Road to Mandalay," and "Boots," by Kipling, with solos by Floyd Burden, and a harmonious rendition of "O! Man River."

The Gleemen, organized in early summer, have sung together once a week since for their own entertainment. Last week they made their debut in Redmond and later gave a performance at the high
