

Aged Oregonian Tells of Slaying

Fairmont, W. Va., Feb. 7 (AP)—Benjamin Franklin Male, 74, who returned voluntarily from Oregon to stand trial for the slaying of a crippled school teacher 40 years ago, was convicted of voluntary manslaughter.

The verdict carries a penalty of one to five years' imprisonment.

Fairmont, W. Va., Feb. 7 (AP)—An all-male jury was expected today to get the case of Benjamin Franklin Male, 74, who returned voluntarily from Oregon to face a 40-year-old murder charge.

Judge Charles E. Miller was expected to hear final arguments, deliver his charge and send the case to the jury this afternoon.

The defense rested yesterday after Male pleaded self defense and reconstructed the slaying of W. O. Smith, a crippled school teacher, on the afternoon of Nov. 16, 1905. Smith taught in a one-room schoolhouse where Cecil Male, then nine, was a pupil. Cecil is the defendant's son.

Boy Complains
Male said his boy came home complaining that Smith had "almost beat me to death."

The father, a husky construction worker in those days, went to Smith's boarding house in Hout, W. Va., and asked for an explanation. Male testified that Smith said he had punished Cecil because the boy was "telling that I was hugging and kissing little girls."

"We had a nice little fight down there," Male testified. "The reason I hit him with a mactock was because I beat him to it. I saw him looking around in back of me and when I turned and saw the mactock I saw he was reaching for it, so I grabbed it."

"I grabbed it and hit him over the left ear. I didn't mean it to be fatal," Male testified.

Heads West
The white-haired, bent defendant said he changed clothes after the battle and fled across the country to St. Helens, Ore., where he was a lumber worker until his ailing wife told authorities there he was wanted for murder.

Male told the court he had never forgot a single detail of the fight with the crippled Smith. He seemed eager to tell his story.

The prosecution asked a verdict of first degree murder and the gallows for Male, although Marion county never has hanged a man.

Veterans Oppose Governor's Bill

By an overwhelming majority members of the Deschutes county veterans council voted last night to reject house bill No. 271, the so-called "governor's bill." Main objection was that it would create a virtual dictatorship in veterans' affairs. Action of the council followed an hour-long debate following reading of the bill by M. Ray Cooper, secretary-treasurer.

Following the decision to reject the bill it was agreed that D. Ray Miller, council commander, and M. Ray Cooper should go to Salem on Friday to meet with representatives from Central Oregon.

Veterans' service officers, such as now employed by Deschutes and several other Oregon counties, are preferable to a centralized officer as veterans will not go to Portland or Salem to discuss their problems, it was agreed. It was also suggested that such officers might be appointed for a district rather than a single county. L. H. Helphrey, Deschutes county veterans service officer stated that, in his opinion, such an officer could care for a territory embracing adjoining counties in sparsely populated areas.

Buildings Not Suitable
Following rejection of the bill, Wayne Entrikin, chairman of the building committee, reported that he had inspected Camp Abbot buildings, which will shortly be put on sale, yesterday afternoon with a committee composed of Henry Nelson, M. Ray Cooper, D. Ray Miller and C. G. Reiter. The committee agreed, Entrikin said, that the buildings were unsuitable for use as a veterans' center.

Louis H. Helphrey, service officer, reported that 170 veterans or their dependants had called at his office during January. A great deal of interest was manifested in government loans to veterans, he said, pointing out that these loans are handled exclusively by banks or other private lending agencies. Of those who called during the month 37 were World War I veterans, five were widows, three were sent to the veterans' hospitals, two were assisted in securing further education, three needing specialized jobs were placed and one handicapped veteran received on-the-job training placement.
