

Foreign Policies Under Attack By Thomas Dewey

By Lyle C. Wilson
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Washington, Feb. 9 (UP)—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's Lincoln day speech looked today like a warning to President Roosevelt to drive a firm political bargain with Premier Josef V. Stalin. The alternative would be to risk a major foreign policy dispute with well-organized republicans.

Dewey spoke here last night at the Statler hotel before about 1200 party leaders. He made a double-barreled attack on Roosevelt's home and foreign policies. He endorsed the foreign policy program of Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, R., Mich., which is under such bitter attack in the domestic communist press as to suggest that Stalin would balk at it.

Response Good

The reaction of congressional leaders in the audience generally was enthusiastic. For example, Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry of Nebraska, republican whip, thought Dewey put the Roosevelt administration on notice "to do a better job in foreign relations."

Dewey didn't get a 100 per cent endorsement, however. Sen. Raymond Willis, R., Ind., was lukewarm on the foreign policy section of Dewey's speech but agreed with his discussion on domestic affairs.

Roosevelt doubtless is aware now of Stalin's ideas on the Vandenberg plan. He and the Soviet Union leader are in conference in the Black sea area with Prime Minister Winston Churchill. The Vandenberg proposal was in two parts:

1. An immediate Anglo-American-Russian-Chinese treaty to keep Germany and Japan permanently disarmed.
2. Agreement now that political settlements in Europe made or being made in various liberated countries be subject to general review after the war.

Interpretation Made

The communist press interprets this latter provision as sabotage of the Tehran agreements reached

In 1943 by Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin in their first conference. Some others interpret it as a precaution against communication of a large part of Europe. The communist press says that is nonsense. If Dewey can make the Vandenberg plan stick as formal republican doctrine, it may be up to the president to obtain Stalin's agreement to postwar re-examination of European political questions. The alternative could be a bitter and bruising political contest in this country over the shape and scope of postwar security machinery.

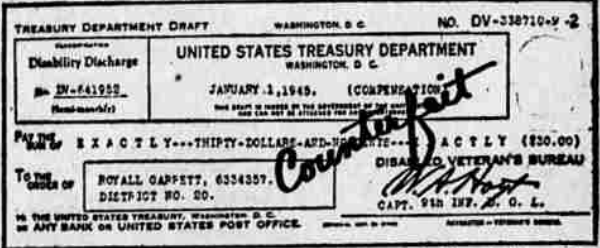

Dewey conceded that opposing points of view must be reconciled at the Black sea conference and that we cannot expect to have it all our way.

Watch Out for These Fakes

If offered a check like that reproduced above, don't cash it—call a cop. It's a fake government check for "disabled veterans compensation," according to recent warning by the U. S. Secret Service. Printed on yellow safety paper, the racketeers' clever counterfeits are issued by the non-existent "Disabled Veterans Bureau."

First Car Trip to Crater Lake Recalled By Madras Resident

Madras, Feb. 9 (Special)—The department of interior booklet on Crater lake national park contains a column on the fly leaf entitled "Historic Events." In 1907, it states, "The first automobile to reach the rim of Crater lake was driven by Charles True of Medford." True, at present, is equipment operator at the Madras army airfield.

Recounting his trip, the Medford man told how he started out in the early morning of Aug. 11, 1907 in a two-cylinder, 22-horsepower Reo with the kindly advice from friends that "it just couldn't be done." But he had talked of hardly anything else for two weeks and proceeded to drive from Medford to the lake by the way of Klamath Falls as it was commonly thought that the Pumice rock grade was far too steep for any car. Klamath Falls was made on the second day out. After leaving there he encountered plenty of rocks in the road, which he bridged over by piling smaller ones to make a runway. This process slowed him down considerably—40 miles one day.

On the 14th he reached the rim of the lake where he was met by Will G. Steel "one of the fathers of Crater lake" who visited the site in 1885 and was instrumental in getting it established as a national park. Steel said: "Congratulations, you are the first person to drive a car to the rim of Crater lake." Others had gone as far as where the present park headquarters are now located, but were afraid to tackle the narrow, steep, canyon road to the top, preferring to walk instead.

Staying only two hours, True decided to go back to Medford by the west entrance. About four miles from the park boundary, True ran into a high center in the road causing the axles to drag and the wheels to spin. The only solution was to shovel out and after working at this until dark, he had to sit up under a tree all night in a place known as Warwick camp where the freighters had stopped over during the Indian war days when there was a freight line between Jacksonville and Fort Klamath. More trouble came the next day when he had to ford Union creek.

On the second day out of the park, True reached home where his friends learned about his trip. Steel spread the story about his feat and some years afterwards officials wanted to put the old Reo on exhibition, but True had sold it and its whereabouts were unknown.

True later drove the stage between Medford and Crater lake. For 15 years he has been an employee at the park. Since the war, however, it has not been kept open in the winter and he has been sent here for the last three winter seasons as equipment operator on the airbase.

Chamber Selects 1945 Committees

Madras, February 9 (Special)—The Jefferson county Chamber of commerce met for its first luncheon session Wednesday noon. Committee appointments were made by the president, Kenneth W. Sawyer, for the coming year. Committees appointed were: civic improvement, George Dee, Jeff Murry, Walt McCaulou and Everett Van Wert; industrial and business development, Purl Lytle, Howard W. Turner, Ray Wilson and P. D. Lewis; county improvement, Fred Rodman, Joe L. Waud and Gus Ramsey; agriculture, John Campbell, Ed Greenwood and Emil Henske.

Decision as to the appointment or election of a new secretary has been postponed until the board of directors amend the present by-laws. Several weeks ago Nestor Seaman, secretary of the group, resigned because of differences in policies. Miss Helen M. Cherry was elected to replace Seaman but is unable to accept the office because of other duties.
