Excavation for the foundation for the $15,000 structure of the Bend Concrete Products company - the city's newest industry - was begun today at 735 Greenwood avenue. R. P. Syverson and L. N. Eisenbach, co-partners in the venture, said that they expected that the plant would be in operation by March 1.

The building, to be 32 by 98 feet, is to be constructed of masonry blocks, a product of the concern. It will have a concrete floor. Syverson said that all priorities for materials had been obtained, and that he expected rapid construction. He left today for Portland to consummate deals for machinery.

Day of Prayer Set for Friday

In observance of the World Day of Prayer, a union service will be held at the First Baptist church Friday February 16, at 2 p.m.

Inspired by two church women, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery and Mrs. Henry Peabody, the "Day of Prayer" was started in 1920, in the United States, but within a few years the women of Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South America also joined the observance, so that the significant word "World" was prefixed to this "Day of Prayer," until today 51 different countries participate in this day of prayer.

The service to be held in the First Baptist church this year, will be one of worship, music and intercession. Churches sharing in the program are the First Presbyterian, Christian, Methodist, Episcopal, Westminster Presbyterian and Baptist. All women of the city are cordially invited, pastors in charge announced.

Author of 'Fifty Years Below Zero' Dies at Point Barrow

Point Barrow, Alaska, Feb. 12 (AP) - Charles Digory Brower, 82-year-old "King of the Arctic" and Uncle Sam's most northerly citizen for 60 years, died yesterday.

The famed trader and friend and rescuer of explorers suffered a heart attack as he sat in his comfortable home working on his hobby of ivory carving, of which he was a master.

And today the white and native citizens of this farthest north community on the North American continent were arranging as they could a funeral procession as they could muster.

Death came as Brower would have wished, for he once said that "I wouldn't die anywhere else." He found the Arctic friendly and profitable and was on intimate terms with more famous personalities than if he had stayed in his native New York.

Brower had been seven times around the world as deckhand and skipper on schooners and whalers and was equally at home in an igloo or Manhattan drawing room, but his visits "outside" became fewer with the years.

Author of the book "Fifty Years Below Zero," Brower shared in many adventures. He was lost off Point Barrow with 16 men. He arrived home alone. He once brought a sailing vessel into San Francisco after she had a fire in her hold for 53 days. The day after the vessel docked, she blew up and sank.

Brower accumulated a modest fortune from whaling and trading. In his active years he caught three or more whales a year, realizing from $6,000 to $10,000 each, and he once controlled all the trading posts on the Arctic rim.

He had two Eskimo wives and they bore him 14 children. Two of his seven sons are in the army; Maj. James Barrow and Pvt. Arnold Barrow, a paratrooper in training at Fort Benning, Ga. A third son is William Brower, a golf professional in Portland, Ore.

Brower was a member of numerous scientific and adventurers' organizations and numbered among his personal friends Vilhjalmur Stefansson, Sir Hubert Wilkins, Charles A. Lindbergh, Roald Amundsen, Wiley Post and Will Rogers.

Post and Rogers were on their way to visit Brower in 1935 when they crashed to their deaths 12 miles from Point Barrow.
