Ex-Medico Gets 'Action' on B-29 Japanese Raids

By McQuown Wright (United Press Staff Corresponde

Twentieth Bomber Command Headquarters, Somewhere in India (IP)—After giving up a commission as a surgeon in the army medical corps, Maj. James W. Schonlau, 20th homber command pilot, and his B-29 crew already have performed 10 major and five minor operations on the Japanese. Called to active duty in June, 1941, from a residency in surgery at the Shreveport (La.) Charity hospital, the 30-year-old medico was commissioned a first ileutenant in the medical corps and assigned to McDill field, Florida, with the air corps.

"There was too much paper work which anybody can do," Maj. Schonlau e x p 1 a in e d, "and no surgery." dia (IP)-After giving up a com-work which anybody can do, Maj. Schonlau explained, "and no surgery."

Becomes Air Cadet
By what the major called "a bit of luck" as at that time medical corps officers supposedly could not transfer, he enlisted as an aviation cadet and was graduated from Kelly Field in February, 1942. However, the shift meant a drop to rank of second lieutenant. The net result of this change of "professions" is that Maj. Schonlau—his last promotion came in June—has bombed the Japanese 10 times, four of which have been over their homeland. And his ship has been officially credited with destroying five Japanese fighters on the Yawata mission—and all without a scratch to the crew. His record of ships shot down is only equaled by one other B-29 at present writing.

By leaving the medical corps Maj. Schonlau becomes one of the few medical men who are pilots.

Maj. Schonlau becomes one of the few medical men who are pilots. Even after he had been commissioned as a pilot and undergone Flying Fortress training it looked like it would be the same old story—much paper work, little flying, and no surgery. The major also was engaged in the extensive tests which were made before the big planes were sent into combat.

Asks for Combat Duty
He asked for assignment to a squadron and was assigned in November, 1943. He came overseas in April.

With the possible exception of the Yawata raid Maj. Schonlau remembers one trip near Atlanta, Ga., as the most hectic. Flying a B-17 wth two passengers his engines caught fire. In fact one of them dropped off. But the passengers refused to jump. So, lacking the engine, he brought the plane down safely.

"I have a $11 g h t prejudice against passengers," he reported. Maj. Schonlau said that after his present tour of duty he believed that he might get an assignment to a hospital as a surgeon—which he would welcome.
