

County and City Planning Proposal Aired in Salem

By Eric W. Allen, Jr.
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Salem, Ore., Feb. 22 (AP)—Heated debate arose in a public hearing before the county and cities committee of the Oregon house of representatives last night over the bill which would create city and county planning commissions.

Chief objections to the bill (HB 374) arose from what opponents of the bill called "annexation" powers for cities, "undemocratic" powers on the part of such commissions, and the "barbed wire entanglements of contradictions" in the bill.

Proponents of the measure, however, told how the bill would control the development of the "fringe development" around cities, would permit an intelligent approach to the problems of city and county growth and would protect cities from traffic, fire and health hazards.

Tugman Speaker
William Tugman, Eugene Register-Guard managing editor, appearing for the central Lane Planning council, said that the chief objectives of the bill were: 1. An enabling act to allow cooperation in common planning; and 2. Valid control over plants which are at present not controlled and which have been growing according to no system or plans.

No objections were raised by anyone to the proposed "master plans" to be created in cities, and which could be followed as a city grows.

Chief opponent of the bill to appear was James A. Rodman, Eugene real estate man and member of the Eugene Planning council, who said that under the bill the county court would have to ask the planning commission for permission for much of their work and construction.

He also objected to the limitation of the "use and sale" of land, which he said was in the bill, and the restrictions he said would be placed upon public utility and thoroughfare construction.

Devers Speaks
J. M. Devers, representing the state highway commission, had only one suggestion to make, saying that the commission was strongly against any regulation of its present powers, and presented a proposed amendment releasing the commission from the provisions of the bill.

Farm representatives, Morton Tompkins, state grange master, and Ray W. Gill, of the Multnomah county Pomona grange, said they felt strongly that the control of rural areas by cities was "undemocratic," and that excessive authority would be granted to such commissions.

These arguments were countered by Fred A. Cuthbert, at present working with the FHA, and formerly an Eugene architect, who said that the authority was not excessive, that similar legislation is now in effect in both Washington and California, and that indeed Oregon was perhaps "behind the times" in such legislation.

Group Listed
Many persons spoke at the three-hour hearing. Among them, for the bill, were Fred Inkster, president of the League of Oregon Cities, which drew the bill; William Bowes, Portland city commissioner; Ed Benke, Eugene chamber of commerce; W. W. Rosebraugh, Salem planning council; E. M. Igl, Klamath Falls planning council, and Arthur McVoy, Portland planning council.

Chief objectors to the bill were real estate men and farm representatives, including Horace Dryer, Portland realty board; Tompkins and Gill, and Wendell Barnett, of the Farmers Union.

Both houses of the legislature were spinning along in high gear again today, after being slowed down by long-winded debates in the senate and the slowdown tactics of democrats in the house. Senate President Howard C. Belmont invoked a rule which limits debate to five minutes on a bill and three minutes on resolutions.

Demos Blocked
In the house republicans got around the democratic slowdown by fulfilling the letter of rule 46 which requires reading of bills on final passage, but permitted the business of the house to go forward without delay.

The senate completed action on a memorial asking congress to abolish the office of price administration and other agencies after the war, when it concurred in house amendments and passed the measure.

SHEEPSKIN DEED FILED
Rochester, Ind. (AP)—A patent deed from the U. S. government bearing the signature of President John Tyler, dated April 1, 1843, was filed for recording in the office of Fulton County Recorder Lee Moore recently, in an effort to acquire title to an 80-acre tract, part of which borders on Lake Bruce. Moore said the deed was drawn on sheepskin in accordance with custom and was in good condition despite its old age of 101 years.

WATER-IN-SWALLEY
Water was turned into the Swalley ditch, for the convenience of settlers wishing to fill their cisterns, and will remain in the canal and laterals until 8 o'clock tomorrow, officers of the district have announced.
