KLAMATH AND THE COLUMBIA VALLEY
Plans for the diversion of Klamath river waters over to the Pit or the Shasta river were discussed at an army engineer hearing held in Klamath Falls on Tuesday.

At the hearing the army men asserted that no water would be diverted that could be used for irrigation in the Klamath country.

Our sympathy in this affair is entirely with the Klamath country. We record it here for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that even though, as a result of these protests, the diversion plan is officially disapproved at this time the threat will continue while the Columbia valley authority proposal is alive.

Senator Mitchell's Columbia valley bill takes in the Klamath river. The rights of the state in the management of the waters of that river are protected under last year's flood control act and the recently enacted rivers and harbors act.

We imagine that the voice of the Klamath country will be heard in the opposition to the Mitchell Columbia valley bill.

GABRIELSON URGES DELAY
Speaking about the sealion here the other day we said that the late George W. Sorenson, of Port Orford, had secured from the U. S. biological survey the evidence that led to the repeal of the bounty law in 1931.

That director, by the way, is an Oregonian, Ira N. Gabrielson and everybody who knows "Gabe" knows that he is a thorough scientist, that he is acquainted intimately with Oregon fish and wild life problems and can be depended on for wise advice.

We think that Director Gabrielson's suggestion should be heeded by the state senate.

The complete story of the recent arrest of two Washington residents in an automobile carrying a large quantity of liquor, the disposition of the liquor and the reason for the release of the automobile is a topic of unusual local interest.

Washington Column

By Peter Edson
U. S. Army Air Forces Tactical Training Center, Orlando, Fla.—In General George S. Patton's great dash across France, one of his flanks was left totally unprotected save for the guard put down from the skies by the 19th U. S. Tactical Air Command.

This was a new development in warfare. The idea of employing an air force to protect a ground force's flank from above is something that the military experts will have to ponder on and perfect for a long time before they put it in their textbooks on military science, yet it is only one of a number of surprising new tactics which today dictate the writing of these textbooks on a loose-leaf principle, so that some pages can be torn out easily and replaced with later tactical doctrines.

Milford Smith Now Lieutenant
With a 12th AAF B-25 group in the Mediterranean area—Milford A. Smith of Bend, Oregon, has been promoted to first lieutenant at a B-25 Mitchell bomber base where he is flying as a pilot, it was announced recently by the 12th air force.

The Bend pilot has been flying with the veteran B-25 Mitchell bomber group to which he is assigned in its recent air offensive directed against vital enemy communications links in northern Italy.

WOUNDED WREN PITCHES IN
South Bend, Ind. (AP)—An example for the home front may be found in the action of Mrs. H. Cropper, a twice-wounded Wren who returned here with an honorable discharge after five-and-a-half years service in Britain.

The surprising thing about General Fuller's doctrine is that it makes absolutely no mention of air power. Over-simplifying, the nine principles may be stated briefly as: the determination of the objective, taking the offensive, attainment of mass superiority, economy in the use of force, maintenance of momentum, the use of surprise, the obtaining of security, simplicity of operation, the co-operation of all forces.

Rock of Ages

A SONG TO REMEMBER

THE STORY: After hearing Chopin play, Louis Pleyel asks Jozef Elsner if Frederic can get a concert ready in two weeks.

THE MOST CELEBRATED CAFE IN PARIS
They found lodgings at No. 27 Boulevard Poissoniere, not the best in Paris; yet not the worst either.

One evening Sowsinski, a fellow pianist (as he said) who occupied rooms on the floor directly below, invited Frederic and Professor Elsner to be his guests at the most celebrated cafe in Paris.

"No, no!" a waiter cried to Sowsinski. "There are no tables—there are no—"

"Yes, Monsieur." Jozef Elsner said sharply. "A table, please, for Frederic Chopin!"

Frederic's knees trembled. "Shss—Professor, please—"

"No, no!" a waiter cried to Sowsinski. "There are no tables—there are no—"

"Yes, Monsieur." Jozef Elsner said sharply. "A table, please, for Frederic Chopin!"

Frederic's face had suddenly gone white. A waiter was bowing and gesturing to three persons who had just come into the cafe.

"Chopin!" "This way, Messieurs—" But Jozef Elsner's quick ear had caught the contemptuous voice. He looked down at a table into the sneering face of a podgy, middle-aged man.

"Never heard of him." "Tch, tch. The foremost figure in music—and you never heard of him? Let me tell you, Monsieur, you are an ignoramus!"

"Oh, indeed!" echoed Jozef Elsner. "Why in Warsaw the public went mad about him—yes, mad! And on one occasion, Kalkbrenner—the famous critic Kalkbrenner heard him—and raved! Yes, raved!"
