Job Club for Men Over 40 Is Again In Driver's Seat

By Mary Laing
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Chicago (U)—The war has turned the tables for members of the Men-Over-Forty club.

The once "forgotten men" of the business world find that employers now are more willing to agree, for the duration anyway, that work can begin again at 40.

Membership of the club, a unique one-for-all-for-one employment bureau, has been whittled down to eight men—and the only reason they're still around is that the club takes great pains to make sure no square pegs are forced into round holes.

Phone Keeps Ringing
Current executive vice president of the club—the man who places members in jobs—is C. F. Boake. He joined several months ago and is waiting for a position that suits him to a "T" before turning his office over to the next member in line. Meantime, he serves without pay.

The pleasant, gray-haired industrial engineer was interrupted several times by phone calls from employers as he told the club's story today. An aircraft company, looking for an office manager—thought "217" would do nicely. A war plant in need of a works manager. A publishing house after an accountant—and so on.

Boake explained that qualifications of the members, most of whom are executives, are listed periodically and sent to firms through the Chicago employers' association. The men are identified by number.

The lists are prepared by the members. They also do a large share of the clerical work, although their main assignment is to canvass companies to find what positions are open and then report back to Boake. This reconnaissance is done with the qualifications of all members in mind.

Club's Standards High
The club's membership standards are strict. After a prospective member establishes that he is at least 40 years old, that he is in good health, is unemployed and has an earning capacity of at least $4,000 a year, he fills in a detailed application. Then he is given a "stiff" screen test by Boake. If he passes, he must face a quiz by all members, who determine whether he makes the grade.

The club was founded in 1939 by Lewis Tuells, who was forced out of his position when his company eliminated the department which he headed. Tuells got together with others in the same boat—most of them high-salaried employees who lost out to younger men willing to work for less money.

Since then, 500 men have been placed in jobs and now are members of the alumni association, to which they pay dues. Since members of the club itself pay nothing, this is the only source of revenue.

Lapine

Lapine, March 7 (Special)—The Lapine high school will give a three act play entitled "Flower of the Ranch" Friday evening March 9 at 7:30 at the school gym.

Betty and Jo Clea Cheek spent the weekend in Chemult.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Garrison spent the weekend at The Dalles.

Bob Powell was able to return to Portland Sunday after a couple of weeks illness.

Mrs. Buck O'Day and children will make an extended visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Miller. The children entered school Monday.

Carey and Betty Stearns made a business trip to Prineville Saturday. Ethel Conway of Prineville, who has been visiting the Stearns for several days returned with them.

Maud Eaton of Sweet Home spent a few days in Lapine last week.

A. J. Thompson, County Superintendent of schools visited Lapine schools last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Annes Nichols and family of Shevlin spent Saturday and Sunday in Lapine visiting old friends.
