BLACKOUT CRUTCHES

London (UP)—A wounded soldier in Worcester is taking no chances of being hit during the blackout. He has equipped his crutches with headlights.

Blame Placed

"At times our centers evolve into a 'sob sister' type," Vindal laughed. "For the American boy on the prairie is a masterpiece. He can get into more trouble in less time than any specie of humanity. Of course, the fault always lies with the English structure, the English personality or the English blackout."

"But when it was noised abroad that I was coming home," Vindal concluded, "those fellows to whom we owe so much took the time to look me up, extend a grimy hand and say, 'Tell the folks back home thanks—for the blood plasma, for the letters and for the Red Cross.'"

USO Has Party Underground; Group Hikes Into Lava Tunnel

Something new in USO entertainment was provided for servicemen visiting Bend Sunday afternoon, when, accompanied by junior and senior hostesses and hosts, they were taken a mile underground—back to the far depth of Lava river tunnel, central feature of a state park 14 miles south of Bend.

The trip into the cave was not exactly a hike, for the winding group had hardly penetrated the main part of the long conduit, large enough in places to accommodate a freight engine, when soldiers and girls burst into song and discovered that the cavern acoustics were fine.

As the group, behind swinging gasoline lanterns and flashlights, got well into the huge tunnel, the repertoire of songs ranged from those of world war I days to the war songs of the present.
