For obvious reasons, the commission said, neither names nor the number of persons on present lists of war prisoners can be published.

Miss Hinkle told officers that she was in bed, and had not yet fallen asleep, when she heard a man enter the house. She said that she thought it was her father, and did not investigate. But when she heard the intruder leave and slam the door, she arose and tried to turn on the lights. They would not work. Subsequent investigation showed that the burglar had pulled he switch outside the house before entering.
