Hobby Fills His Den With 6,000 Records

Ithaca, N. Y. (AP)—Although Don Townsend says he doesn't know one note from another, the hobby "den" in his home here is filled with more than 6,000 phonograph records—jazz variety—collected during the last 17 years.

A signpost over the door of the den reads "Jitterbugs' Shangri-la." Townsend's record index lists nearly 15,000 jazz selections, including 53 different arrangements of "St. Louis Blues," 38 of "Star Dust," and 34 of "Bugle Call Rag." He specializes in these melodies of popular dance bands, and has 234 of them.

Townsend, who says, "music was my worst subject in school," became a collector of second-hand records when his mother gave him an old phonograph as a boy. "I still don't know one note from another, but I have a musical ear, people say, I can readily tell if a musician is hitting the wrong note."

When a musician taught him to recognize the various instruments in a band and their tone when played on a record, Townsend wrote to all recording bands to obtain the names of their members. "Through my field," he says, "I can tell who is playing on what instrument for at least three-quarters of the records I have."

400 Times He's Fished --- and Not a Nibble

Long Beach, Cal. (AP)—Henry Hedel is a patient man—about fish. He has been on over 400 fishing expeditions, but has never caught a fish. Not even a nibble. Hedel is a cook at the California Shipbuilding Corp. commissary. And there his fishing troubles began.

He was named as cook of the Calship trial-run crew back in the days when the first ship from the yard went on its initial trip. Since then, Hedel has been on every trial run of the more than 400 ships which the yard has turned out.

Each trip, the cook takes along his fishing line. Between meals, he finds time to drop it over the stern and do a little angling. For bait, he uses galley scraps. That may be the cause of his bad luck, Hedel says.

His score to date is no bites and no fish. However, Hedel is not giving up. He intends to keep right on fishing every time a vessel takes a trial run and he's aboard. Even though he hasn't caught a single fish, Hedel holds the record for the world's most patient angler.

Police Here for Safety Meeting

Traffic law enforcement officials from Bend, Redmond and Prineville will meet at the city hall here today at 7:30 o'clock to complete plans for local participation in the state-wide brake emphasis program, scheduled to run from April 15 to June 1, according to Ken C. Gulick, chief of police, who called the meeting. The brake emphasis program is sponsored nationally by the International Association of Chiefs of Police, and is designed to make the public conscious of the importance of maintaining good brakes in the interests of safety and vehicle conservation, Chief Gulick said.

State Man Here Assisting Chief Gulick in conducting the meeting will be Sid King, director of the safety division, office of Robert S. Farrell, secretary of state, who represents Chief Harry M. Niles, Portland, state coordinator for the brake program, in the district meeting here.

The technique of making the brake check featuring the IACP program will be demonstrated and the procedure in making out weekly reports, to be submitted to the state and national headquarters of the program, will be explained by King.

Program Explained "The program was planned as a means of impressing the public with the importance of regular attention to brakes," King said. "Motor vehicles are older today than during the days prior to the war. The average age of private passenger vehicles today is eight and one-half years, compared to four years before the war."

"There are many factors that can cause brakes to get out of adjustment, and often the driver does not realize that his brakes are not adequate for safe stopping. That is what the brake check is designed to do."
