Bend Paper Wins High State Honor

Eugene, Ore., April 6 (AP)—Annual high school newspaper awards were announced today by the University of Oregon school of journalism, with Franklin of Portland winning the top honors. Fifty nine papers were entered. The Arnold Bennett Hall cup was awarded The Post of Franklin.

The Clarion of Salem high school won the Guard cup for the best printed paper in a school of more than 500 enrollment, with honorable mention to the Cardinal of Lincoln high of Portland, the Washingtonian of Washington high of Portland, and the Lantern of Pendleton.

The Register cup for best printed paper for schools of less than 500 enrollment went to The Pine Murmurs of Bend high, with honorable mention to the Beaverton Hummer and the Parkrose Bud.

Allen Cup Awarded
The Eric W. Allen cup for the best mimeographed paper published weekly or semi-weekly went to the Scappoose Hi-Life, with the Polygraph of the Girls' Polytechnic of Portland and the Clarion Hi-Life given honorable mention.

Grants Pass won the Harris Ellsworth award for the best news notes. McKenzie Echo was the winner for the best mimeographed paper published monthly, with Ink Drops of Yamhill and the War Whoop of Molalla receiving honorable mention.

Honor awarded the Bend high school for having the best printed paper in the state may be only temporary, it was learned here today, inasmuch as the local school was apparently listed in the wrong classification. Bend's enrollment, including junior high students, is over 500.

Pendleton was also wrongly classified. It was announced from Eugene today, and there is a possibility that the eastern Oregon school will get the Register cup and Bend will be elevated to the group competing for the Guard cup.

The Pine Murmurs is printed in The Bulletin shop.

Water Supply

Data Presented
Crescent Lake—Net inflow of 5,500 acre feet compared with average of 11,000 acre feet, or 46 per cent normal. Lake to peak at 35,000 acre feet.

Odell creek—Flow of 22,000 acre feet, 91 per cent average and about 5 per cent above last year's flow.

Tumalo creek—Predicted flow of 32,000 acre feet, or 75 per cent of average but slightly better than last year.

Squaw creek—Predicted flow of 34,500 acre feet, or 73 per cent of normal and 1 per cent above last year's forecast.

Crane Prairie—Reservoir has 32,300 now and is expected to peak at not to exceed 36,000 acre feet.

Wickiup—Reservoir now has 67,200 and will go to 68,000. Probably be used only to supply 5,000 to 10,000 acres in north unit late this season because of delay in construction work.

Holdover Lacking
The effect of these amounts of available water on the projects supplied is surprisingly similar, the irrigation and reclamation officials agreed. Perry said that the 6,700 acres in the Tumalo project will be able to use creek flow to June 25 and lake water for the next 60 days, with nothing but small creek flow after Sept. 1. Lack of holdover available last year necessitates closer figuring, he said.

The big Central Oregon district, supplied from Crane Prairie reservoir, will have only about 80 per cent of the water available last year, O. E. Anderson, district manager, estimated, though performance of Little river is somewhat of a puzzle. The Central Oregon district, Arnold and Lone Pine are all expected to pull through in fairly good shape by liberal use of Cline Falls water later in the season.

The 6,000 acres under the Squaw creek canal and the 1,200 acres with prior rights under the Sisters Irrigation district will get a little better than was actually received last year but will still be below normal supplies. The 700 acres under Plainview and McAllister ditches that get water about one year in three will again get only stock water this season, barring some brief high runoff periods, Perry predicted. The Swalley canal with old rights will get the usual adequate supply for its 4,283 acres.

Must Watch Ditches
All of the officials emphasized the necessity this year of keeping distribution ditches clean despite labor shortages if maximum crops are to be produced from the limited water supply.

High snow cover and advance soaking of the watersheds were reported relatively better for the Ochoco and Crooked river areas than for the upper Deschutes. Lack of low snow and little early runoff into the reservoir complicates the forecast, according to LaSalle E. Coles, district manager.

Coles reported storage of only 12,350 acre feet today compared with 23,700 a year ago. A forecast of 11,000 acre feet of inflow yet to come was made, however, compared with only about 3,000 acre feet last year.

If this amount is realized the 8,500 acres in the district can get delivery of two feet per acre which will mean a fair supply with careful use, Coles and county agent Gus Woods agreed.

May Be Better
The 9,000 or so acres that obtain water from unregulated streams of the Crooked river watershed should get water supplies at least equal to last year and possibly a little better, it was agreed.

Soil moisture in the farming lands is fairly good over most of the area, especially in northern Deschutes and in Crook county, though soil lands are dry in the top six inches and will have to be irrigated before plowing for later potato planting, several men reported. General irrigation will not start as early as last year, however.

Forest officials reported that low ranges are backward because of cold weather but that grass started on them last fall, making spring grazing prospects favorable. High ranges are covered with much more snow than last year, they said. Jefferson county ranges will open late again this year, said A. W. Christenson of the SCS.
