20 Republics to Honor Argentina

Washington, April 9 (UP)—Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., announced today that the 20 American republics have decided to resume normal diplomatic relations with Argentina.

The announcement was made by Stettinius at a press conference. The department instructed its charge d'affaires in Buenos Aires to inform the acting foreign minister of Argentina of the action.

The charge d'affaires' call on the foreign minister was the first formal contact that the United States has had with the regime of president Edelmiro Farrell since it assumed office more than a year ago.

Stettinius said that all of the American republics had reached their decision unanimously after consultation. He said "this decision followed the reorientation of Argentine foreign policy reflected by her declaration of a state of war against Axis countries and her adherence to the acts of the Mexico City conference on March 27 and her subsequent steps of a practical nature contemplated in the declarations made in the resolution on Argentina by the inter-American conference on problems on war and peace."

Othman Gets Lowdown From Ellsworth on Oregon Plant

By Frederick C. Othman (United Press Staff Correspondent)
Washington, April 9 (UP)—You put the sawdust in at one end, see, and out of the other comes molasses. Now you're set to make alcohol, aspirin tablets, fozder, perfume, vanilla and other things that Rep. Harris Ellsworth of Oregon gladly will mention.

What brought this up was the cattle shortage, caused by a lack of feed. I was talking to Rep. Ellsworth and he said this was a shame because sawdust, which piles up in mountains at every saw mill, can be turned into cattle food as rich or richer than soybean cakes. It turns out further that Rep. Ellsworth, a Roseburg, Ore., newspaper publisher when he isn't lawmaking, is one of the sparkplugs behind the world's greatest sawdust rendering plant, now being built at Springfield, Ore.

He chose that particular spot because 825 tons of sawdust pile up there every day, more than any place else in the country. Before the end of the summer, the experts will be percolating sawdust in a solution of acid, thereby releasing sugar in the form of molasses. This they will turn into alcohol at the rate of 4,100,000 gallons a year. That's a lot of alcohol, but it's only the beginning.

The alcohol comes out of one spigot; from another comes lignin, a kind of chemists' Chinese puzzle, but similar to coal and petroleum. From it is made the vanilla, the aspirin, and all the other products upon which the chemists now are working. "If we can sell the lignin for two and a half cents a pound, the alcohol won't cost us anything," Ellsworth said. "What we need is further experimentation and that takes more money for the federal forest products laboratories at Madison, Wis., which have been doing a marvelous job on limited appropriations. He said—and it's not easy to disagree—that here's one place the government can sink some cash and come out with a profit. When you chop down a tree and make lumber, it develops, you waste 70 per cent of the wood in the form of sawdust, chips and useless branches. The sawdust conversion plant uses the waste. "Which makes the process a little like finding a gold mine in the sky," Ellsworth added. "We're getting something most of us never knew existed."

Germany has some 20 of these sawdust factories, Japan has two. The original developer of the German sawdust plant was Jewish. So were his chief engineers. They eventually escaped a concentration camp, went to England and finally came to America to work for the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association. "But when they saw what was being done by Dr. J. Alfred Hall, then chief biochemist of the forest service, they almost stood around with their mouths open," Ellsworth said. "They had never seen anything like this plant in Oregon. It is four times bigger than the biggest German factory. Where the Germans took 24 hours to turn one pile of sawdust into alcohol, we do it in seven." The new factory, ordered by the war production board, built by the defense plant corp., and operated by the Willamette Valley Wood Chemical Co., cost the taxpayers $2,237,000. If they don't get their money back, Ellsworth will eat sawdust. Maybe he will, anyway. And you, too, some time in the future. Properly prepared, sawdust makes a tasty dish.

Shirley Temple To Be Married

Hollywood, April 9 (UP)—Shirley Temple, who practically grew up on the screen before the eyes of millions of Americans, flashed a two-carat engagement ring today and looked forward to becoming Mrs. John George Agar. She announced her engagement to Agar, a sergeant in the army air forces, last night, but said they did not plan to be married for two or three years. The engagement was supposed to be a secret until April 23, Shirley's 17th birthday. But she wore her ring to a class luncheon at the exclusive Westlake school for girls and the secret was out. Central American quipo wood, also called bongo, is as light as balsa and more uniform in specific gravity; it is as suitable as balsa in the so-called sandwich construction of aircraft.
