Oregon's Forest Heavily Hunted, Figures Indicate

By Will Lindley (United Press Staff Correspondent) Portland, Ore., April 10 (U) Despite curtailment of gasoline, 51,000 big game hunters stalked

51,000 big game hunters stalked through Oregon's forests during 1943 in search of ration points running wild.

The two-year-old estimate is the latest one available, but it is indicative of the ever-increasing return to nature. Some game animals are being killed off too rapidly: these must be replaced. Some are increasing too rapidly: in this case the hunting season must be lengthened so that the population may be cut until the land can support the game.

Species Listed

A census of Oregon's game population reveals a number of species rarely hunted but appearing in abundance. For instance, the average hunter may not recognize all the game birds in the following list, all of which may be shot in the state within state game commission season:

Ducks, geese, grouse (sooty and blue). Hungarian partridges,

The Washington Senators broke training at their University of Maryland camp today and moved to their home park, Griffith stadium, for a week of final preparation before opening the season against the New York Yankees next Monday. The Nats defeated the Martin Bombers, a war plant team, 4 to 3, in their finale here yesterday.

Wilmington, Del., April 10 (U) The Boston Braves were getting adept today at winning games in the late innings. They broke a dall tie in the eighth yesterday to top the Philadelphia Phillics, 5 top the Philadelphia Finnes, to 4. The teams play again today.

Frederick, Md., April 10 up. Infielder George Kell of the Philadelphia Athleltics has cor-rected a major fault in spring training—he isn't hitting into dou-ble plays any more—manager Connie Mack said today Mack said he wasn't very pleased with the condition of the team in general, but emphasized that Kelli's work stood out.
