Big League Nines Go Into Action as 1945 Season Opens

New York, April 19 (1P) - Ed Heusser's first pitching job of 1945, a 6 to 0 shutout for Cincin nati over Pittsburg, may cause fellow moundsmen to raise the question when it comes time to destion when it comes time to leave for spring training next season—"is this trip necessary?" Heusser isn't trying to help the office of defense transportation. He just didn't care for spring training and reported late, getting only nine days of conditioning. Other pitchers were "on the beam" too, yesterday. Paul (Dizzy) Trout, backed by some lusty hitting from the supposedly anemic Detroit Tigers, shut out the Browns at St. Louis, 11 to 0. The Tigers made 21 hits, scoring three runs in the first inning off Brownie Ace, Jack Kramer, to make Trout's work easy.

Russ Christopher of the athletics had to go 12 innings at Philadelphia before winning a duel from Washington's 40-year-old John Niggeling, 1 to 0. Niggeling had a shade the better of it until the 11th when he went out for a pinch hitter, giving up only The delivery THE DREAMER

Portland Beavers belied the promise they had given earlier this season against other coast league teams as each dropped a game before disappointed fans in their home town openers last night.

The Beavers dropped a 2-1 decision to the Hollywood Stars, the last place club in the standings, while the league-leading Rainiers lost to the Oakland Oaks by 3-2.

1925, Melvin Thomas Ott has been doing considerably more than all right.

He found his way back to the Polo Grounds that day and finally presented the letter he was bearing to McGraw, then managing the Giants. The letter was from one of McGraw's friends and recommended the bearer as a coming major league baseball prospect. the Sacramento Solons 10-9.

By Leo H. Petersen
(United Press Sports Editer)
New York, April 19 (IPs.—A timid youth of 15 stepped out of a taxicab in midtown Manhattan looking for John J. McGraw.

He was directed to the offices of the New York Giants where he learned that McGraw already had left for the Polo Grounds. So the kid, a little scared of the big city after living in Louisiana, started out to find a subway. He found one, but instead of winding up at the Polo Grounds he found he was at Coney Island.

"Yes sir," Ott shot back, "when I was a kid."

He's played a lot of outfield since then—so much that almost every time he goes to bat he sels a new record. And to the thousands who know him, to the millions who have seen him play, to the men who go all out for him on the diamond every day, and the Louisiana, started out to find a subway. He found one, but instead of winding up at the Polo Grounds he found he was at Coney Island.

His chief worry now is the Giants and their bid for the 1945 National league pennant, but his thoughts are still pretty much with those service men. nas no enemies, not even amons men.

"I just couldn't help from getting lumps in my throat when I saw those kids in hospitals." Ott explained. "Baseball seemed pretty far away, and not very important."

But another season has storted.

There are 23 A schools entered, 14 B teams and 16 C squads. The 24-event program will be conducted by Col. Bill Hayward and coach John Warren and Anse Cornell of the University of Oregon.

But another season has started and Ott is back at his same old A recent government survey stand.
