Rhythm-Studded Adventure Story

Three former members of th Deschutes national forest staff have written to local headquar-ters of the forest from widely scattered sections of the world, telling of thrilling experiences in the war. Each expressed a desire the war. Each expressed a desire to be back "among the pines." From a rest camp somewhere in the south Pacific, W. E. Nelson, former guard and lookout, and now a pharmacist's mate 1/c, writes of his participation in the sanguinary struggle on little Iwo Jima island, which he likened unto a "cinder pile."
