

New Nazi Leader Was U-Boat Chief

(By United Press)
Admiral Karl Doenitz, the new fuhrer of Germany, is 54 years old, and is best known for his introduction of ruthless "wolf-pack" operations of German U-boats.

He was appointed supreme commander of the German navy in Jan. 30, 1943. But by December of 1943, the Russians said that German sea reverses and the sinking of the battleship Scharnhorst had forced his resignation and opened a breach between Adolf Hitler and himself.

Only a commodore at the start of the war, Doenitz rose rapidly over the heads of two admirals in the top naval command and supplanted the former German commander Erich Raeder.

Sub For Hitler
On March 13, 1944, Doenitz substituted for Hitler at a "heroes day" ceremony and warned the Germans in a broadcast that "a pitiless struggle is being waged for the existence or annihilation of our nation."

He was the only high nazl official to make a public appearance at the memorial day ceremony. The holiday, falling during the retreat of the Germans from Russia was a dismal affair.

In his rise to head of the navy, Doenitz had many fights with other officers.

Pal Of Raeder
As head of the submarine warfare section of the navy, Doenitz fought with Raeder, then navy commander, allegedly over gestapo and storm trooper activity at submarine bases. Doenitz also charged Raeder with false reporting on the number of Allied sinkings.

One nazl official reported that Doenitz charged Raeder with responsibility "for the miscarriage of submarine warfare." Soon after, Doenitz replaced Raeder as naval commander.

Visited Japs
Doenitz also was linked at one time with Japanese naval operations. In February, 1943, he made a U-boat voyage around the cape of Good Hope to a point near Madagascar where he conferred with Admiral Osami Nagano, former chief of the Japanese naval staff.

Two of his sons were killed in naval warfare in the spring of 1944.

"Pacific Power & Light meets all our service emergencies"

says F. H. Loughton, Realtor in Seaside, Oregon

"AND those emergencies are really something. Not only do we have severe winter storms that keep the PP&L boys on their toes, but we have other problems peculiar to vacation spots.

"Seaside's permanent population is about 5500, but during the summer months it becomes Oregon's second largest city, with a population of 35,000 to 50,000. PP&L must, and does, maintain facilities capable of handling this tremendous seasonal peak.

"I remember Seaside as it was 59 years ago, when I moved here with my parents. It was a vacation spot then, but there were only a few scattered houses and limited hotel accommodations. Two to three hundred vacationists made a record season, and most of them brought tents and spent the entire summer.

"Seaside's early electric system would get over-loaded with only a few hundred vacationists in town. Lights would often burn only a cherry red, interruptions were frequent, and oil lamps were standard equipment in every household.

"Ever since PP&L took over here, the company has been a great factor in the steady growth of Seaside, anticipating our electrical needs and supplying dependable service under all kinds of conditions."

Mr. Loughton, a native of Astoria, has been a resident of Seaside since 1886. His first job was in the old Logan mill where a steam engine drove the dynamo supplying Seaside's first electric service—available at first to only a limited number of business houses.

After leaving the mill, he drove a horse-drawn stage between Seaside and Arch Cape, the 28 miles constituting a dawn-to-dark trip. With no roads, the route was down the sandy beach, and departure time depended on the tide.

While driving stage, Mr. Loughton became convinced of the development possibilities of the coast communities, and in 1908 entered the real estate business. He has taken an important part in the development of both Seaside and Cannon Beach. He served as postmaster at Seaside for a total of 19 years, and served eight years on the city council, including one year as mayor.
