

U. S. Fliers Hit Japanese Engines In China Strikes

By Alfred Ravenholt
(United Press War Correspondent)
A Northernmost Air Base, 14th Air Force, China (U.P.)—Locomotive-busting on the Japanese-operated network of north China railways is a science which U. S. fighter pilots of the 14th Air Force have developed to a point where it threatens the enemy's entire Asiatic defense plan.

With sweeps ranging from the Yangtze river to Peiping and from the Ordos desert to the Yellow sea, fighter planes, cooperating with Mitchell B-25 medium bombers, virtually have denied the Japanese effective daytime use of their key railways.

On the Pingham, Tsingpu, Lung-hai and Tsungpu railways, the only link between Manchuria, Korea and Japan's southern empire since the American landing on Okinawa blocked coastwise shipping, American planes have maintained a constant patrol from dawn to dusk.

North of the Yellow river, the "Flying Dragon" squadron based here strikes at rail bridges, repair yards and trains venturing out during the day.

Aim for the Boilers
Maj. Robert A. Clendinning of 613 Vale street, Bloomington, Ill., squadron commander, said:

"We always strike for a locomotive, aiming the burst at the boiler with our 50-caliber incendiary explosive and armor-piercing bullets. If the locomotive has the pressure up, steam usually sprouts from all sides and we see the Japanese engineers and firemen tumbling from the cab."

The Japanese have begun arming their locomotives. Pilots say the real engines now often are hidden in the center of the train with attempted camouflage and a fake locomotive is shoved along in front of the train.

When an enemy train is caught rushing urgently needed troops to the front in daylight, all other trains on the network are alerted and rush for shelter.

First Lt. Wyman D. (Porky) Anderson, 536 Abbot road, East Lansing, Mich., told of such an incident.

Engine Races Plane
"I was flying my regular morning beat up the railroad with our flight when I spotted a Japanese train which had been alerted rolling hell bent for leather for the nearest town to get under cover of railway revetments and ack-ack guns. The engineers were trying to race me, pushing on all steam."

China's Strong Man—a Sketch by Freyre

(NEA Telephoto)
The firmness and strength which have characterized the international dealings of T. V. Soong are reflected in this sketch made of the Chinese Foreign Minister at San Francisco by Rafael Freyre, NEA artist.

I asked Anderson what happened.
"Well, he didn't make it," he replied with a grin.

Other pilots of Flying Dragon squadron, who were given their name for their close-in ground support of Merrill's Marauders in Burma last year, described in their alert shack what they termed the split-second target selection.

First Lt. Gene S. Schloemer, Roala, Mo., and 1st Lt. Meyer O. Newell, 133 W. 33rd street, Bayonne, N. J., said they had to try to kill as many Japanese as possible and yet save as many Chinese as they could.

"If we find a passenger train, we only strafe the locomotive unless we are positive the cars are loaded with Japanese. Japanese soldiers usually scramble for ditches along the tracks as soon as the train is attacked, while civilians usually remain in their coaches," they said.

Speed Across Plains
Capt. Malcolm I. Roundtree, Joplin, Mo., said the Japanese not only built covered reinforced revetments at all stations where the trains hide when in danger of attack, but that engineers forced to move trains during the daytime try to sneak slowly through tunnels or along mountainsides and then make a speedy dash across the open plains.

Second Lt. E. S. Snow, 422 Lewis avenue, Evansville, Ind.; F.O. Edward H. Miller, 1005 Broadway, Springfield, O., and 1st Lt. Harold S. Snow, Ausable Forks, N. Y., were all of the opinion that it is virtually impossible to destroy a locomotive completely.

As 1st Lt. David O. Wilson, 1227 N. 18th street, Birmingham, Ala., a veteran of over 25 of these more than 3 1/2-hour missions, said:

"We riddle those locomotives like they were a bridge. We usually figure on putting one out of action for two to three weeks. We're keeping enough of them out and then with the help of heavy bombers searing the repair crews working in the railway repair yards."

Woman Guerilla Visits America

Pullman, Wash., May 4 (U.P.)—An eyewitness account of hungry Japanese soldiers turning cannibals and eating the flesh of captive children was related yesterday by Mrs. Julia La Calvada Peters, famous Filipino guerilla fighter.

Mrs. Peters, who now holds a captaincy in the Philippine army and at one time was division commander of 10,000 American and Filipino guerrillas, said she hoped to gain a transfer to the U. S. army.

On leave to visit her American army officer husband, Mrs. Peters made one of her rare appearances before a civilian audience at Washington State college. Her husband, still suffering from wounds incurred as a guerilla fighter two years ago, is undergoing medical treatment at Seattle. He is a WSC graduate.

Tells Of Horror
Mrs. Peters told of her personal torture at the hands of Jap soldiers. She said she was forced to dig her own grave and watch an American army officer beheaded, knowing her turn was next. A sudden typhoon and the aid of friends combined to save her and she escaped to the hills for three years of fighting the Japs and "evening the score on many of them."

"I personally saw hungry Japanese soldiers with broken, bombed supply lines, turn cannibals and roast and eat the flesh of captives as though they were pigs," Mrs. Peters said. "They even did that with children."

Legionnaires Plan For May 19 Party

Plans for a city-wide collection of playing cards for hospitalized veterans, and for a big party to be held on May 19 at the Carroll Acres hall, were principal topics of discussion last night when the Percy A. Stevens post of the American Legion met in the assembly room at the courthouse. Progress being made by the committee in charge of promoting a Veterans' memorial building for Bend, was also related by J. S. Davis, chairman.

Mayor A. T. Niebergall was named chairman of the committee to gather playing cards, and he said today that shortly he will announce the locations of depots throughout the city where residents may leave cards for the fighters in hospitals.

The party committee is headed by Fire Chief LeRoy Fox, who said that veterans of all wars are invited to attend, and that a smoker will highlight the evening.

GROUP RIDE PLANNED

The first group ride of the season will be held next Sunday by the Rim Rock Riders, it was announced today by Loraine Bowns, publicity representative for the group. The equestrians are asked to gather at the Rim Rock Riders club, when the destination of the ride will be decided upon.
