

German Front in North Breaks As Nazi Leaders Make Attempt To Surrender Troops to Allies

BY LOUIS F. KEEMLE
(United Press War Editor)

The German front collapsed completely in the north today and the last vestiges of resistance were melting in the south. Nazi leaders admitted the hopelessness of the situation and were working mainly to deliver as many of their remaining troops as possible to the western allies instead of Russia before the formal end of the war.

Reports persisted that surrender negotiations were in progress in Denmark or at the German naval base of Kiel between Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery and Nazi Fuehrer Admiral Karl Doenitz.

The German-controlled Oslo radio said a "cease fire" order already had been issued in Holland under an armistice in the German-held area embracing the Rotterdam, Amsterdam and The Hague districts. In the swirling military picture of rapidly disappearing battle lines, the following occurred:

The American Seventh army in the south broke through the Brenner pass into Italy for an early junction with the American Fifth. Salzburg, once headquarters of the southern redoubt, surrendered unconditionally to the Seventh army without a fight. Berchtesgaden is only 11 miles to the south.

Redoubt Encircled
The Third army had the Czechoslovakian redoubt almost encircled, driving almost unopposed to within five miles of Linz, Austria. Russian forces were just east of Linz.

The British Second army in the north crossed the border into Denmark unopposed and advanced 15 miles, the German-controlled Oslo radio said.

All fighting ceased on the Kiel peninsula. The Germans declared the Kiel and Flensburg naval bases open cities, to be occupied at will by the British.

German abandonment of Kiel and Flensburg and the unopposed border crossing appeared to be an indication that the Germans planned no stand in Denmark and might be preparing to surrender its Nazi garrison of about 75,000 men.

No Fighting Reported
"So far, no fighting has been reported in Denmark after British troops crossed the border," the Nazi broadcast from Oslo said. "Allied transports with food for civilians are going through the German lines under agreement."

Reports about negotiations for general surrender were all without official confirmation and in many cases conflicting. The most circumstantial were those concerning the purported exchanges between Doenitz and Marshal Montgomery.

Stoekholm reported the following Nazis involved in the negotiations:
Col. Gen. Georg Lindermann, German commander in Denmark; Joseph Terboven, German commissioner in Norway; and Admiral Fritz Boehm, German commander in Norway.

Thousands Included
If the reports were true, the negotiations might cover the 150,000 to 300,000 German troops in Norway as well as those in Denmark and in scattered north German pockets.

Fighting already was about over in Holland, where Allied trucks were bringing in food for the starving Dutch civilian population under a truce. Early surrender of the upwards of 75,000 Germans in Holland was expected.

The cleanup in northern Germany was proceeding rapidly. In rear areas along the Baltic coast southeast of Denmark, some 500,000 Germans, including 10

One of the few controversies ever aired in an open meeting at an international conference had reached a climax when this picture was taken in the San Francisco Opera House. generals, surrendered to the British yesterday. British and American troops formed an almost solid junction with the Russians along a 60-mile front from the port of Wismar on the Baltic to Wittenberg on the Elbe in the south. The Canadians mopping up the North sea pocket were within five miles of Emden and 12 miles from Wilhelmshafen.

Flames Destroy Nazi Chancellery

Moscow, May 4 (UP)—A Russian war correspondent reported today that after the capture of Berlin he found the chancellery—where the Nazis said Adolf Hitler died—engulfed in flames which drove him from Hitler's office after a quick survey.

(If the correspondent's reported visit to the chancellery shed any light on Hitler's fate, the Soviet censorship apparently was not ready to pass it since Moscow has issued no official report on what was found at the chancellery—if anything—that would bear on the German version of Hitler's death.)
Lt. Col. Pavel Troyanovsky, in a dispatch to the Soviet army organ Red Star, described the fire-hastened visit to the chancellery soon after the last resistance in Berlin ended.

BICYCLES STOLEN
Theft of two bicycles were being investigated today by Bend police after their owners had reported their loss. Ray Lloyd, 2305 Awbrey road, said that his bicycle was stolen from in front of 1622 Awbrey road while he was visiting friends there; and Fred Pickett, 273 Jefferson place, said his was taken from the rack in front of the Montgomery-Ward order office.
