Hitler: Most Ruthless in World History

Adolph Hitler, the Austrian who destroyed his own country, made himself master of Germany in 14 years and became known as the most powerful and ruthless conqueror in history.

Before be conquered, he was a hod-carrier, a house painter, a common laborer. Viennese workmen called him a burn when he went there after his mother died. Hitler lived in a flophouse.

Workers despised him. He had a almost femininely smooth white skin and soft, muscleless limbs and arms, with a caved-in chest. They laughed at vague ar-guments about Germany which he could not back up, at his pic-ture of a Germany in which he would not be a laborer or a vagabond, so he began to read facts to back up his theories.

'Dangerous Fanatic' During World War I, Hitler joined the Bavarian army, swearing allegiance to Germany's cause. Officers said he gloried in bloodshed, and they awarded him an Iron Cross for bravery. But they refused to give him a com-they retused to give him a com-mission. He was termed a "dan-gerous fanatic."

Hitler was beaten when Ger-many fell. He went as a spy for the Reichswehr to a meeting of six men fighting for anti-Semi-tism and staved to become the harangued himself into leader, ship of Deutsches Arbeiter Partel, a recognized force in Munich. He overplayed his hand in the abortive beer hall "putsch" when he tried to abolish the Bavarian government. But during his year in prison for his attempt, he wrote "Mein Kampf," outlining the plans which he later carried out step by step until stopped by the allies.

Locked away in his files to control the European continent, aided by a new type of warfare, twere hundreds of pictures of constellations. On one afternoon, of opportunists who wanted a share in Hitler's world.

Took Personal Command Only when his forces in Russia were be at en back, when Der garding the wisdom of the measure he was about to take.

In 1934, Hitler purged his own afternoon, of opportunists who wanted a share in Hitler's world.

Took Personal Command Only when his forces in Russia were be at en back, when Der sur he was about to take.

In 1934, Hitler purged his were built to proport the European continent, were here to the alternoon, of opportunists who wanted a share in Hitler's world.

Took Personal Command Only when his forces in Russia were be at en back, when Der son at the plans which he later carried out step have been abortive beer hall "putsch" were hundreds of pictures of constellations. On one afternoon, of opportunists who wanted a share in Hitler's world.

Took Personal Command Only when his forces in Russia were be at en back, when Der son at the carried out and the little proportion of the European continent, the carrier was not a proportunist who wanted a share in Hitler's world.

Took Personal Command on December, 1941, did the people's confidence show signs of totterers," he stumped Germany. He ing presidential powers when Hinbecame a German citizen to run against the aging Field Marshal von Hindenburg, German leader, in 1932. He won 11,000,000 votes, him Adolf, though his faithful Africa, and in Russia the Wehrshe forced his way into Hindenblindly when he sent his armies tremendous momentum of the red tism and stayed to become the burg's cabinet and, in 1933, was into Poland, in 1939, to touch off drive. The allies closed in from the plans which he later carried out step by step until stopped by the allies.

Dictator of the Reich
Aided by Rudolf Hess, Paul Joseph Goebbels and other "believers," he stumped Germany. He became a German citizen to run against the aging Fleid Marshal yon Hindenburg German leader.

Still, very few persons knew yon Hindenburg German leader.

seventh member, beginning his made dictator by the Reichstag, the bomb which rocked the whole west and in Italy there no longer whole race theory which gave rise. He immediately began his boycott to one of the greatest waves of Jews, repressed all religions, when he took Austria and Czech.

Hitler retired more and more to Rockherder with a Rockherder w persecution in history.

By 1923, the little man who ents into concentration camps.

By 1923, the little man who ents into concentration camps.

He encouraged paganism and horough Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, eliminating enamed harangued himself into leaders self, became somewhat of an as-confidence show signs of totter-ing. But Hiler shouted to his peo-ple, lauding his losing ally, Benito Mussolini, and promised "vic-tory in 1942."

The goal was a complete con-quest of axis-held North Africa. But once again Wavell found him-self thwarted by that besetting nemesis of every desert advance —faltering supply. Conversely, Rommel's resistance stiffened as forced to encamp on a flat, ex-posed plain. After a week, the British were weakened further by troop transfers to Singapore.

Rommel Counterattacks

Rommel launched a savage coun-terattack under cover of a sting-ing sandstorm. The attack was successful. The pattern of the

Another week passed and then his supply lines shortened.

Berchtesgaden with a Bavarian girl, Eva Braun, whom he met in 1935. By 1938, Miss Braun had been established as "Die Chefin" ferminine counterpart of Hitler's intimate title, Der Chef) in Hitler's intimate title, Der Chef) in Hitler's household. Reports of unrest grew in Holland, France, Denmark, throughout "festung Europa" which Hitler's armies controlled Hitler refered additional trolled. Hitler ordered additional purges, to enforce the nazi dictum of "one party and absolute obedi-ence to der fuehrer."

Escaped Generals' Plot
The purges were not thoroughly carried out until after a group of Junker generals attempted to assassinate Hilter on July 19, 1944, as he stood in the inner circle of official headquarters. A bomb exploded only six feet away from the falling leader. Hitler empowered Himmler to clean up the home front. Her-mann Goering and Paul Joseph Goebbels were named "dictator" and "plenipotentiary" of the German home front and occupied Europe, as Hitler waited for the outcome of the purge which no one outside of Germany could

The leader of the super-nation was constantly guarded, appar-ently fearing for his life from every hand. But he shouted again that Germany would not give up, even when Russian armies, calling down revenge on the Germans poured across nazi soil, and Anglo American armies advanced into

His plans were ended for con-quering the world for the Aryan race of supermen, the pure race he sought to build while enslaving the rest of the world. The allies ended his destiny when he was 56 years old and after he had ruled Germany for only 11 years.

Fuehrer Ruins General's Plan To Take Suez

For the Germans, the insatiable demands of the Russian struggle took priority over all other con-siderations in 1941 and 1942. None realized this more acutely than Gen. Erwin Rommel, whose Afrika Korps stood stranded just inside Egypt in October, 1941.

Rommel, called upon to recoup Mussolin's Libyan debacle, had done that and more. Now he threatened to snap the British Mediterranean life-line beyond repair. Once astride the Suez, he would be in a position to pry open the Near East and the Mid-open the Near East and the sud-die East, perhaps even to break through to the Indian ocean and join the legions of Japan. But Hitler did not choose to play out what appeared to be a winning hand. Rommel waited for supplies in vain. British Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell saw his chance. On Nov. 15, five British spearheads sprang across the border in the greatest allied drive of the war up to that time: hailed by Churchill as the first undertaken with men and machines to match

Rommel had no choice but to retreat. His main problem soon became to avert a full-fledged rout. For the British pressed their second Libyan offensive with impressive speed. Tobruk's gallant tarrison was relieved early in Degarrison was relieved early in De-cember and by Christmas the fly-ing Imperial columns were past the caravan terminals of Derna and Benghasi, nundreds of miles lasted three months. The two armies rested, fidgeted and waited for reinforcements under a desert sun that withered men and made metal too hot to touch.

On May 26, Rommel opened his final desert campaign. He ordered his tanks forward. For two weeks, the struggle swirled back and forth below Tobruk. Then, on June 13, British Gen. Neil Mritchle sent his tanks into a nazi trap and lost 230 of them. Stripped of their armor, the British lost Tobruk and 25,000 men stationed there. The squat nazi tanks roared on eastward over the coastal plain.

Nazis Reach Matruh

Bardio, on the Matruh

Bardio, on the Matruh

Richard Press Staff Correspondent)

The lid had flown off the North I african powder keg with the fall of France in June, 1940.

For the French collapse had given the Axis French Morocco, Tunisia and Algeria, handing it the effective control of the entire central Mediterranean. Jumping at this chance to cut Britain's east-tree the Bar vital valve leading to the Indian The Unity, 1940, from East Africa at the Suez's rear. From Ethlopia, The Suez's rear. From Ethlopia and The Suez's rear. From Ethlopia and The Suez's rear. From Ethlop

Nazis Reach Matruh
Bardio, on the Egyptian border, fell after a week, and then Sidi Barrani, 100 miles inside. By June 29, the nazi tide had reached Matruh, the largest town west of Alexandria, and Rommel was nearer the green valley of the Nile and the brown ditch of the Suez than ever before. England and the Empire, Churchill told commons, were in mortal peril. At a sun-baked collection of huts named El Alamein-a name now fixed in history with Water-loo and Gettysburg—the British finally called a halt. Grimly they threw up a defensive line run-ning inland 35 miles to a vast alkali bed called the Qattara de-pression. Rommel flunc his pany. alkali bed called the Qattara depression. Rommel flung his panzers furiously against the makeshift defense, and for several critical days the decision hung in the balance. But although the line bent perilously, it failed to crack. For a third time the pay-off victory had eluded the axis grasp. And now Rommel's Afrika Korps was out of tanks, ammunition and water—everything a desert army needs. It dug in to await supplies and reinforcements.

This time, it got them, but the British got more. They also got

This time, it got them, but the British got more. They also got new leaders: the spirited and offensive-minded Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery and the master strategist Sir Harold R. L. G. The British reached Ey Agheila, 400 miles west of the Egyptian border, on Jan. 7. They got no farther. Rommel had entrenched himself in the desert hills and Alexander salt bogs just west of the port. Repaired and replenished, his big guns and tanks slapped back fiercely at his pursuers, who were Under these talented soldiers, Under these talented soldiers, a new British army took shape that summer. Not only quantities of British men and supplies but long lines of U. S. Sherman tanks and more than 1,000 American planes were added to give it new bite and stamina. Visiting Cairo, Churchill told Montgomery his orders this time were to "destroy Rommel and his army for good." Rommel and his army for good."

By autumn, preparations were completed.
The attack was launched just previous months was repeated in reverse. In two days the British a mighty, wheel-to-wheel artillery were swept back 80 miles to Agedaba. Benghazi fell once more, der came: "Forward!"

and for its capture Rommel received the rank of field marshal. By Feb. 20, the British were back in the vicinity of Tobruk. Early Axis Strategy Called Early Axis Strategy Called In the vicinity of Tobruk. There they regrouped, held desperately and forced a stalemate on a line running from Tobruk 40 miles south to the desert crossroads of Bir Hachelm. The lull lasted three months. The two armies rested, fidgeted and waited for reinforcements under a desert sun that with-vital valve leading to the Indian ocean, as their next military goal. The first blow was struck in July, 1940, from East Africa at the Suez's rear. From Ethiopia, Italian armies drove south into Kenya and north into the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, posing a grave threat to the canal's western coast. This was followed in August by Italian south of Price and the structure of Price and the support of the support gust by Italian occupation of Brit-ish Somaliland on the Gulf of Aden, virtually plugging the ditch from the south.

Up on the north African coast, a month later, another Italian force under Marshal Rudolfo Graziani launched the first of the Axis' desert campaigns—designed to seize and block the Suez from Sappers led the advance, jab-bing cautiously to uncover buried mines. Stain-faced tommy-gun-ners followed, covering the sap-pers. Next came the PBI's—poor bloody infantry—holding their bayonets outthrust before them in the darkness. Their job was to widen with cold steel the breaches started in the enemy lines by the earlier bombardment. Then the allied tanks clanked forward to seek out the German Rommel, expecting Montgom-ery to attack in the center, had divided his divisions in the hope of crushing the British in their jaws. Instead, Montgomery struck from the north, aiming to overpower the German flank. For rine days, the Germans managed to hold on in brutal no-quarter fighting. Then, on Nov. 2, the speedy medium-weight Shermans drove a fatal gap in the enemy wall. Before the day was out 350 axis tanks and 400 big guns lay blackened and smoking among axis tanks and 400 big guns lay blackened and smoking among the desert dunes. The Afrika Korps crumpled and fled. Montgomery's lanes and tanks struck out in hot pursuit.

The British had won a victory whose importance it was impossible to exaggerate. Not only had they smashed the Rommel muth.

whose importance it was impossible to exaggerate. Not only had they smashed the Rommel myth and lifted for good the axis threat to their eastern life-line. They had placed the initiative in World War II once and for all in the hands of the allies. The chase that began at El Alamein was not to end until Bizerte and Tunis six months later.

Rommel Imaly call a halt, his supply lines stretched overlong. In East Africa, meanwhile, the tide of war had been reversed both Kenya and the Sudan strengthened British columns removed the threat to the Suez from that direction, more than wiping out the Italians' previous gains.

No longer hampered by a French threat on their flank about 250,000 confident Italian paraded eastward from Libra across the lightly-defended Egyptian border. They carried with them marble monuments to celebrate anticipated victories.

The British, outnumbered, retreated and in a matter of weeks the Italian march reached Sid Barrani, 100 miles inside Egypt There, Graziani paused, apparently to regroup his forces for a drive through to Alexandria and the canal.

the canal. The British, reinforced in December, beat him to the punch.

130,000 Italians Captured
Australians, New Zealanders and Indians under Gen. Sir Archi-bald Wavell probed the Italian and Indians under Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell probed the Italian lines, found them shaky and pressed their advantage hard. Sidi Barrani fell before Christmas, and the Imperials swept back across the border.

The port of Tobruk, the caravan terminals of Derna and Benghazi far along the coast were stormed and taken in brisk fighting. Upward of 130,000 Italian were captured. By Feb. 18, 1941, the British advance had reached El Aghelia, 500 miles west of its starting point.

El Aghella, 500 miles west of its starting point.

All Libya might have fallen that spring but for two factors:

(1) Wavell's army was depleted seriously to send troops to threatened Greece; (2) the Axis army was stiffened by German armored forces under the nazi panzer and desert expert, Gen. Erwin Rommel.

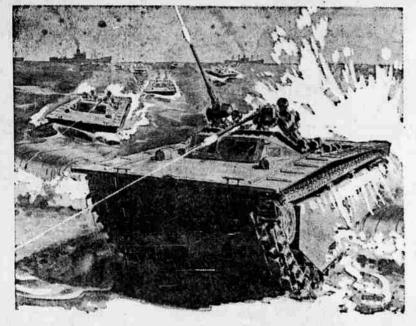

mel.

Rommel took prompt advantage of the skeletonized British force. In a savage charge, his Mark IV tanks, armored cars and Mark IV tanks, armored cars and motorized infantry swept the Imperials from their El Aghella positions late in March. They were back at Benghazi by April 4 Derna fell three days later and three British generals were captured by a nazi scouting party.

Retreat to Egypt
Racing on, Rommel's divisions
—now known as the Africa Korps
—chased Wavell's troops the res of the way back to Egypt faste than they had come. Only at the battered port of Tobruk did a pocket of British resistance manage to hold out.

Not until he had crossed the Egyptian border early in May did

Egyptian border early in May did Rommel finally call a halt, his

ALL OUT FOR THE FINAL BLOW

We're going to knock out Hirohito-

HOLD your Bonds -and BUY MORE

but it won't be easy!

We must fight warily and wisely before our enemy is crushed.

Rats are dangerous—to the last corner!

Our boys on the battle fronts are mindful of these things . . . as they slug away with unremitting valor.

Can we on the home front do any less? Let's black out that "Rising Sun" - with War Bonds!

N Men's Shop

945 Wall St.

"We Dress the Town"

Bend, Oregon

Are You Prepared, Hirohito?

Every one of us, civilian and military, is fully determined to bring this war to a speedy and successful conclusion - through an all-out effort against you and your little "Sons of Heaven."

We're Punching — All of Us!

So be prepared for unlimited losses of both your men and your ships—for our fighting men are in hurry to get back home and we're backing them to the limit. Here we come — and there's no stopping us!

Gregg's BANNER BREAD

Buy More Bonds — And Hold Them!