

Army Rates P-47 And P-31 Planes As AAF's Fastest

Reuel S. Moore
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Washington (AP)—The army is getting higher performance out of its three foremost pursuit planes, crowding on more speed, range and bomb loads, a new roster of AAF planes made public revealed.

The P-47 Thunderbolt with air-cooled engine and the P-51 Mustang, with liquid-cooled engine share honors as the army's fastest planes, so far as published data is concerned, being rated at over 450 miles an hour each. This is 50 miles more than claimed in a similar list issued in February, 1944.

The P-38 Lightning twin-engine fighter is rated at 425 miles an hour, 25 miles faster than reported a year ago.

Various models of the crack fighter planes give various performances, but so far as is published the Thunderbolt has the longest range. The latest model having a combat radius of over 1,000 miles. The combat radius is the distance to the point to which the plane can fly, engage in combat, and return. The Lightning's best radius is 850 miles and the Mustang's 750 miles.

The Lightning can carry up to 4,000 pounds of bombs as compared with 2,000 for the Thunderbolt and Mustang, all representing increased loads as compared with last year. All three now carry rockets, the Thunderbolt packing 10 five-inch rockets.

Double B-25 Bomb Load
One version of the B-25 Mitchell medium bomber is still the most heavily armed plane with one 75-mm. cannon and 14 50-caliber machine guns. The Mitchell is now credited with a bomb load of 4,000 pounds instead of the 2,000 shown last year.

No figures are given on the B-32 or other new super-bombers. The B-29 is credited with carrying more than 10 tons of bombs. Its range is not given.

Only information given on the

P-80 Shooting Star: "Jet-propelled fighter of semi-monocoque construction, with flush-riveted skin. Has pressurized cabin. Capable of carrying heavy loads of ammunition, photographic equipment, bombs, fuel. Manufactured by Lockheed and North American. General Electric developed turbo jet engine."

Dan Culpin Gets His Second Wind

Dan Culpin got his plowing done in record time this year. He was sitting on his porch, enjoying a well-deserved glass of beer, while Bob Wirts, his neighbor, still had over an acre to go.

It burned Bob up, seeing Dan relaxed while he worked. So he'd stop and have a glass of cider—and make out that he was in no hurry anyway.

"And that was the trouble," Dan explained to me. "I kept on going till I got my second wind; and saved my rest until the job was done. He stopped to rest—and he never got his second wind."

From where I sit, there's a moral there for all of us. We've been working hard to win this war. A little rest may look awfully tempting. But by keeping going, by never letting up, we can count on getting our second wind that will overcome weariness and see us through to victory.
