Simons Is Tops In Bend Races

Tubert Simons, top-notch Portland competition rider, was high-point man at Sunday's TT motorcycle races, sponsored by the Cascade Motorcycle club of Bend. Many motorcycle enthusiasts of Central Oregon braved cold wind and chilling rain to watch the events, the first ever staged in Bend.

No one ever guessed that Ray Highland's faultless riding which won him first place in the first heat race, was being done regardless of two broken toes the Eugene boy suffered when his pivot foot connected with a large rock under some low hanging sagebrush on the roughest part of the course. Tai Ryerson placed second, with Harry Nelson third. Both are from Portland. Harold Greenwood of McMinnville placed fourth.

The second heat race found Casey Jones of Eugene and Simons running very close, followed by Walt Larson, Portland and Ole Olson of Vancouver. A costly spill in the fourth lap put Casey in the rear, with no possible chance to catch up before the checkered flag fell. First, Simons; second, Larsen; third, Olson, and fourth, Jones.

Next came the big motors, and the closest and most exciting race of the day. Red Eberly, of Bend, dropped out in the early laps, leaving only Ralph Mooers, Bend, and Bob Dillon, of Portland, to battle it out.

The first and second place winners in the three 45 cubic-inch events and in the one 80 cubic inch event, entered the pits to prepare for the exhibition ride.

While the riders were warming up their motors, Bob Dillon gave an exhibition of motorcycle stunt riding. He was formerly with the Portland motorcycle police drill team.

Portlander Dies In 2-Car Crash

Salem, Ore., Oct. 21 (AP)—L. Glenwood Wheeler, 40, Portland, died Saturday as the result of a two-car, head-on collision ten miles north of here on Pacific highway east, state police said today.

Wheeler was a passenger in a car driven by Robert P. Lewis, also of Portland. Police said Lewis' vehicle apparently sideswiped another car as he attempted to pass a logging truck and crashed head-on with a third car driven by Rank Borwick of Vancouver, Wash.

Borwick, Lewis, Mrs. Jenny Bond, of Orchards, Wash., a passenger in Borwick's car, and L. Dystra, Vancouver, Wash., a passenger in Lewis' car were treated in a hospital here for fractures, cuts and possible internal injuries.

Two women in the sideswiped automobile were not injured.

Pine Losses In Sisters Area From Beetles Are Reviewed

Losses of ponderosa pine in the Sisters region from the western pine beetle are described in a report released by the division of forest insect investigations of the U. S. department of agriculture.

The year 1942 appeared to be the high mark in tree destruction in the Sisters area. Direct control, largely by marked cutting of diseased trees was used in the winters of 1939-40 and 1940-41, with 65,000 acres being covered.

In 1938, losses occurred extensively in the Fort Rock area, but have been selectively cut and since then most of these stands now show only very light losses. Selective cutting of mature and overmature trees removes most of the pine susceptible to beetle damage.

Since 1942 a general decrease in the amount of beetle killed trees has been noted and much of this is ascribed to the increased rainfall which has increased tree vigor, enable the pines to withstand beetle attacks.

However, in the 5 year period ending in 1942, it was estimated that approximately 8.6 per cent of the ponderosa pine stand in the Sisters area had been killed by pine beetle. Losses in the Crescent area were 5.5 per cent, in the West Paulina area 6.8 per cent, Cabin lake 13.8 per cent, and Panhandle area which is immediately south of Bend 18.1 per cent.

Partial cutting of ponderosa pine stands to remove trees most susceptible to beetle attack has proved to be one of the most promising control methods. A more recent development is the so-called sanitation-salvage logging in which trees most likely to succumb to beetle attacks within five to 10 years are removed.

An outbreak of the Great Basin tent caterpillar in the Cabin lake area in 1937 is described in the report. This infestation increased in 1938 and reached epidemic proportion in 1939, with 100 per cent defoliation in some grazing allotments. The caterpillar attacked bitterbrush and in 1940 the infestation had subsided.
