Purported "authentic details" of the construction of America's bomb and of accumulation of such weapons by this country doubtless made interesting reading for the subscribers to London's Daily Express, which published them.

Here, we would say, there was more likelihood that they would be evaluated as imaginative writing of the sort frequently featured in the so-called magazine sections of some of our metropolitan publications.

The Express story conforms closely to the standards of this sort of fantastic sensationalism. Official recognition has been limited to a stereotyped, "no comment", and this, indeed, is as much as it merits.

SHORING UP SECONDARY EDUCATION

Recently Charles A. Sprague, in his Oregon Statesman column "It Seems To Me", reviewed the progress made under the unified state system of higher education set up in the governorship of I. L. Patterson and he concluded with this paragraph:

The institutions still have problems. Though having far greater incomes than ever before the demands have gone up in proportion. The problem of physical plant is extremely critical. The problem of getting qualified faculty members is baffling.

We call particular attention to this sentence in that paragraph—"How to get better preparatory work in lower schools so colleges will not have to do so much 'shoring up' of defective secondary education also perplexes."

In that field, we suggest, lies the greatest local opportunity for betterments that will endure for many years.

In the late forenoon on Wednesday the wire service carrying Oregon election returns tabulated the figures for the state contests as received from the various counties. In each case there was a showing of the number of precincts in the county and the number from which reports had been received and out of the 36 counties there were only nine reporting complete returns.

Fifty-one per cent of persons interviewed in a recent national poll did not know, so we read, what it means to "balance the budget". Must have been members of the new deal administration.

Bend's Yesterdays

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

Ownership of 277 quarts of beer is to be determined at a session of municipal court this afternoon.

The autogyro which attracted so much attention two weeks ago when it hovered over Bend, then headed into the north, was back today and was the first type ever to land on a local field.

Two hundred Odd Fellows and Rebekahs from all over the state are here for the dedication of the new I. O. O. F. temple at the corner of Franklin and Sisemore.

Twenty-five years ago (November 7, 1921) East lake trout are biting more voraciously than at any time of the year, according to anglers returning from Newberry crater.

More unmistakable evidence of better business in Bend was given today when C. J. Dugan of the Bend Iron Works said that work on hand necessitated three castings a week, where formerly one a week was sufficient.

Who Gets Off Easiest—Men or Women?

Maybe you saw that poll on who has the easiest life—men or women? Of course, the men voted that the women did, and the women vice versa.

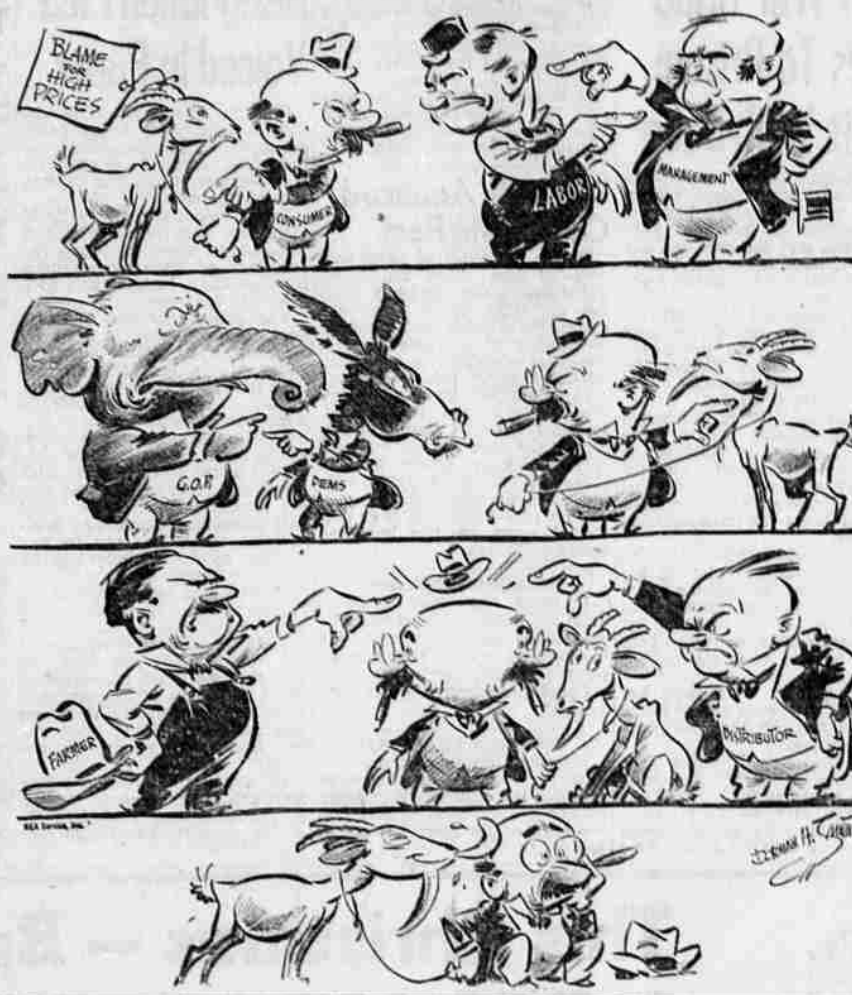

It would be the same in our town—take any family. Thad Phibbs envies his Misus spending the day at home, with no hot office to attend to. And Sue envies Thad his luncheons with the boys; and his evening glass of beer with friends (while she cleans up the dishes in the kitchen).

Of course, none of it goes very deep. Thad knows way deep down that the Misus has plenty of work ruining a house; and Sue knows Thad's friendly glass of beer is well-deserved relaxation after a long hard day's work.

From where I sit, most husbands and wives may grumble now and then—but they know in their hearts it's a case of live and let live, give and take, that comes out pretty even in the end.

Looks Like We're Stuck With It!

Washington Column

(NEA Washington Correspondent)

By Peter Edson

Washington, Nov. 7.—If you think there are a lot of queer fish in this world, wait 'till you read what the Smithsonian institution has to say about the situation.

The good old Smithsonian is one of the most reliable agencies in Washington. When things are in a terrible mess either on the domestic or international fronts, you can always count on the Smithsonian to crash through with appropriate comment—exactly the correct appraisal to put everything in proper perspective—and timed to perfection. Sane, solid, reasoned unhystrical.

It was with expectantly trembling hands, therefore, that our correspondent picked up the Smithsonian Institution's announcement which came in marked, "For release Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 6, 1946."

This would be it. The day after election. Scientific analysis in advance. A clear mandate for the president on what to do about price controls, Peron and Palestine, how to handle congress, John L. Lewis and the atomic bomb.

The first paragraph read as follows: "A total of 39,000 fish, representing 250 species, some of which are new to science were obtained for the Smithsonian Institution collections from the waters around Bikini, site of the atomic bomb test."

Now what better comment on the election could you have than that?

Are you concerned, today, about the outcome of the 1948 presidential elections, as shown by the trend of the 1946 elections? Says the Smithsonian:

"The Bikini waters... were rich in a notable variety of fish life. Some of the species collected were quite curious."

Do you believe the election indicates there will be continuing deadlock between the White House and congress?

"Trigger fish" reveals the Smithsonian Institution communique, "are creatures with rigid spines which 'lock' automatically when the animals are in danger, so that they cannot be bent. They can be 'unlocked,' presumably by a nerve reflex, by the fish themselves, or by some scientist who knows the precise spinal process, or 'trigger' to touch. This 'locking' of the spine is also a defense measure. It makes the owner very difficult for another fish to swallow."

Yep. That's the answer. There are many trigger fish around Washington and what this country needs is a lot more scientists who know the precise spinal processes to touch to break up filibusters, log-jams and stalemates. Stubborn congressmen shouldn't be permitted to lock their spines so that they're hard to swallow. They're hard enough to take as it is.

But will the influence of the reactionary southern bloc in congress be reduced by the outcome of this year's elections?

The Smithsonian merely observes that "Goat fishes... are named from two growths under the mouth which look like chin whiskers of goats."

It is necessary to view with alarm, of course, any election trend toward inflationary pressures such as brought on the crash of 1929. Speaking of inflation, Smithsonian has this to say:

"Porcupine fishes have skins which are covered with sharp spines and which can fill their sack-like bodies with water or inflate them with air until they form a ball about twice their normal size. When the bodies are puffed up the sharp spines are erected to protect the creatures against their enemies. This inflation is a defense measure which takes place almost automatically when a fish is alarmed."

Most observers of election trends are agreed that the communist influence will continue to be a threat to U. S. politics. As the Smithsonian puts it:

"Scorpion fish have bodies covered with venomous spines whose poison is reputed to be sometimes fatal even to man."

As to the "highly dangerous wiring" after an inspection of the place last spring (1946), I received an order issued from the state fire marshal's office that the electrical wiring must be checked by a licensed electrician and made to comply with state electrical code. After some trouble in obtaining an electrician this was done.

It is true the old folks are housed in wooden buildings using wood stoves; so are a lot of other people in Bend, but old folks should not have to. Their fire-proof home is indeed badly needed. I would like to point out though that back through the many years we have carried on and through many difficulties have sincerely tried to do the best with what we had.
