Dr. Bacher Plans Atomic Research

Washington, May 12 (AP)—Dr. Robert F. Bacher left today on a journey which he hopes ultimately will take him deep into the still little known heart of the atom.

For all he knows it may lead to new reservoirs of nuclear energy vastly greater than that blasted open by the atomic bomb.

Bacher at 43 is one of the country's foremost nuclear physicists. He resigned this week as a pioneer member of the atomic energy commission. He quit to return to his first passion, basic research into the fundamental particles of nature and the origin of nuclear forces.

By summer's end he will be installed at California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, as chairman of the division of physics, mathematics and astronomy. He also will be chief of Cal Tech's Norman Bridge laboratory of physics, a post long held by Nobel prize winner Robert A. Millikan.

Drugs for Humans Found Effective On Zoo Animals

By PAUL F. ELLIS
NEW YORK (AP)—New drugs, primarily developed to combat disease in man, now are being used to keep zoo animals healthy.

Penicillin and sulfa drugs have been particularly effective in treating infectious diseases in the lower animals, according to Dr. Arthur Kelly, research director of one of the country's most unusual hospitals.

His hospital is in an isolated section of the jungle-like San Diego zoo, one of the world's largest.

The primates, monkeys, chimpanzees and the gorilla, are especially responsive to the same drugs that are administered to human beings, adding a little more evidence that man and monkey are distant relatives. It is Kelly's job to keep the zoo animals healthy.

Seals Have Ulcers

In research here, it has been found that seals, like man, are plagued with ulcers. Not exactly the same type, but ulcers just the same. Most all animals, including the fish, have most all types of cancer, and some resemble human cancer.

Kelly said there are investigations under way now to determine whether primates—chimpanzees, for instance—might be a better laboratory animal in cancer research than mice or the guinea pig. The trouble, however, is to raise the chimp in captivity. The zoo here has had unusually good success in raising families of chimps.

When a zoo animal dies, an autopsy is performed to determine just what caused death. Kelly said that from the autopsy it can be determined whether a certain zoo family should be placed in quarantine or what can be done to prevent other members from becoming sick.

Specimens Sent Out

The autopsy specimens are sent to many different laboratories for study in connection with human disease.

One of Dr. Kelly's oldest charges is Irish, a South American monkey. He is 25 years old, equivalent to about 75 years in the human race.

The exceptional trait of Irish, according to Kelly, is the fact that he still becomes a father once a year. His offspring have been sent to many other zoos.

Art, Food Mix In Paris Cafe

Paris (AP)—Camille Renault is a 360-pound cook who serves his patrons a "well of love seen by Watteau," "ham a la Renor," and "Roebuck a la Rubens" in his own private art gallery.

Renault, who believes in mixing his art, has a small restaurant in Putreaux, the "red suburb" of Paris, where he keeps a collection of pictures that would be the envy of most art museums.

Patron and friend of many now famous artists, he names his house specialties after the great names in art. A "well of love seen by Watteau," for example, is a pastry with custard inside.

The walls of his restaurant are hung with paintings by such well-known artists as Picasso, Derain, Cleeve Gray, Marcario Vitalist, Corot and Monticelli.

The portly former cook of the French military hero, Marshal Pierre Lyautey, prides himself on being able to recognize talent early. If he thinks an artist shows promise, he may be willing to lend him money and food and in return usually gets a painting.

In a room above his restaurant, he has several hundred unframed paintings, many of which bear the names of now famous well-known painters. He shows them for the enjoyment of his friends and patrons he thinks will appreciate them. He also keeps a choice library his friends can use.

Steel Shares Rise Moderately

New York, May 12 (AP)—A moderate rise in steel shares helped the stock market make a small advance today. Trading kept to about the same slow pace of the previous session.

Gains in the steel group ranged to more than a point in national steel on buying that ignored the possibility of a strike in the industry around mid-year and the current decline in the operating rate of the steel mills.

The day's cautious attitude was prompted by the new White House demand for $4,000,000,000 in additional taxes, made by President Truman.

All sections of the list joined the advance and although gains generally were small, there was an occasional issue with an advance of a point or more, such as allied chemical, Deere & Co., and International Business Machines.

President Dutra Of Brazil Will Pay Visit to U. S.

By W. W. Copeland
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Rio De Janeiro.—President Eurico Gaspar Dutra of Brazil will leave here on May 14 by airplane for an historic visit to the United States as official guest of President Harry S. Truman.

It will make history since it is the first official visit of Brazil to the United States despite more than a century of the closest relations between the two largest nations of the western hemisphere.

President Dutra is scheduled to arrive in Washington on May 18, his 64th birthday. He will be the guest that evening of President Truman for dinner and will spend his first night in Blair house, the temporary White House.

He will stay in Washington until May 21 and then go to New York, where he is scheduled to attend the United Nations. He will leave New York on May 25 for the Tennessee valley and continue from there on May 27 to Miami for his return.

To Talk Business

Officially, the visit is to repay one made to Brazil by President Truman in 1947, when the two presidents first met. Actually, it will be much more than that. There will be many things much deeper than the official banquets and receptions in New York and Washington.

Brazil and the United States have been friends from their very establishment as nations. The United States was the first nation to recognize Brazilian independence when it broke away from Portugal in 1822. From that time on they have been close.

The United States has long been a principal customer of Brazilian products, particularly coffee. Brazil has long looked to the United States for manufactured goods and for financial and technical aid in developing its vast resources.

The two nations were allies in two world wars and in the last one Brazil not only supplied vital air bases for the United States route to Africa but sent an army to Italy to fight alongside Americans.

They also have been the closest of friends in inter-American affairs. Brazilians as a people like Americans as a people, and vice-versa. Their destinies are closely linked.

Brazil Needs Aid

Brazil still needs financial and technical aid for developing its agriculture, transportation, power and industry. That is likely to be one of the topics of conversation in Washington, along with such matters as international defense, the Atlantic pact and the cold war.

An important feature of the visit will be an inspection tour of the Tennessee valley development for possible application on the San Francisco river in Brazil.

The San Francisco historically resembles the Mississippi and Missouri. It was the avenue for early explorers into the vast inland.

The Amazon river is the best known because it is the largest in the world, but the San Francisco has played a far more important role. It rises in the highlands north of the federated capital and flows almost parallel with the coast into the Atlantic in the northeast.

It not only offers opportunities as an immense source of agricultural products, but the government now is studying means of harnessing it for hydro-electric power.

Eat Sparingly for Longevity, Advice

Tokyo (AP)—Eight Japanese centenarians, the eldest 109, gave their reasons for longevity to a Tokyo newspaper. They all contained one piece of advice guaranteed to gladden food-short Japanese: "Don't eat too much."

The senior, 109-year-old Seizaburo Kitaoka, a fisherman from Takamatsu, Shikoku, was 13 years old when Commodore Perry came to Japan, but doesn't recall the event. In fact, Kitaoka told the Mainichi, he didn't know how old he was until a check with the town records showed that he was born in 1840.

Yoshizo Nakashiro, 101, gets up at six in the morning and retires at eight at night. His formula for long life: "To keep the stomach no more than 80 per cent full, to pat the skin around the naval 50 or 60 times when in bed at night and not to lead a disorderly life."

Mrs. Kamo Kurusu also has lived 101 years, all of them in Hiroshima. She claims she never spent a sick day abed—not even when the atom bomb fell. She gives "temple visiting and smoking" as her two long-life-giving hobbies, and says she expects to live "20 or 30 years more."

Mrs. Toki Hasumoto, a comparative youngster just turned 100, says she takes a teaspoonful of sugar whenever she can get it and sleeps naked, two reasons, according to her family, that she has lived so long.

DEMONSTRATION GIVEN

Lt. John F. Lewis, of the Sixth army augmentation team, conducted a demonstration on "Combat Intelligence on the Battalion and Regimental Level" at the regular meeting of the logistics division, No. 6310, of the officers reserve corps last night.
