

Clothes Dryers Made in Bend; New Industry

Bend's newest industry, the manufacture of an improved type of clothes dryer for indoor use, was moving into high gear this week as its one-man staff and operator, George L. Brooks, made plans for increased output. Brooks has already turned out 350 of the new dryers, made from select pine, in his short time of operation, and is looking toward plant and payroll expansion.

The new industry is located at Brooks' home, 725 Silvis lane, in the south part of Bend. Sheds are at present crammed with stock and parts ready for assembly, and Brooks is looking forward to the time when he can erect a larger plant, to meet a demand for his dryer that has been brisk, with a Klamath Falls wholesale firm asking for his entire output.

Pine Is Used

The new Bend industry largely owes its start to the observation made by Brooks that practically all clothes dryers on the market are made of fir, with reject material frequently used. He noted that the surface of these dryers are filled with splinters and have cutting edges. The Bend man decided that such dryers must take a heavy toll in ruined finery, such as nylons and silks—materials which have a tendency to catch on every splintery edge. Incidentally, Brooks admits his wife needed a dryer at the time. So he went to work and turned out a model. Only select pine was used. There are no splinters, nor cutting edges.

Another thing observed by Brooks, when noting how other dryers are assembled, is the fact that they are wobbly, and at times collapse, carrying clean linens and clothing to the floor. Brooks believed an improvement would be in order, so he devised new dowels, heads of which held the various pieces firmly in place. This eliminated rattling and swaying. Then he devised a grip that prevented collapse of a dryer laden with clothing.

Made in Bend

The result was the article which Brooks is now placing on the wholesale market as the Kwik Clothes Dryer, made in Bend from Deschutes pine.

Brooks is now equipped to turn out dryers of all sizes, from two feet wide up to 40 inches. Several types are being turned out, and this week Brooks announced the addition of a new type.

A carpenter and joiner by trade, Brooks has been a resident of Bend for the past 11 years. For 13 years he was in law enforcement work.

Brooks is well pleased with the reception his new dryers has received in Oregon and believes he has pioneered an industry in which pine of the Deschutes country will play an important role.

New Industry Established in Bend

George L. Brooks, 725 Silvis lane, has developed a new industry for Bend, the manufacture of clothes dryers from select pine. Brooks is pictured here with some of the 350 dryers he has turned out in recent weeks. Sturdily built, the dryers are being marketed to the wholesale trade.

NO MISTAKE!

Albany, N. Y., June 30 (AP)—Eight-year-old Bobby Kirkwood stepped up to the ladies' tee on the 15th hole of the Wolfert's Roust course and whaled his iron.

"My gosh," his mother screamed as she saw the ball fly 98 yards into the cup, "you've shot a hole in one!" Bobby looked alarmed. "That doesn't mean I have to stop playing, does it?" he asked.
