Indian Joe Keeps Students Alert

State College, Pa. (AP)—Students at a Pennsylvania State college dormitory have a Menominee Indian as their "getter upper."

The animated alarm clock is Joe Gauthier, a janitor who was born on a reservation in Wisconsin. Every morning he stalks through the halls looking for notes such as "Joe, get me up at 7:45, whether I want to or not." He has a set routine for waking the students.

He empties the metal waste baskets by banging them against his steel disposal cart and then crashes the baskets on the linoleum floor. If that doesn't work, he drags the sleeper from his warm bed and stands him up. Only once has he been forced to take the third step, which includes a bucket of cold water.

Madcap Spike Good Businessman

Sacramento, Cal. (AP)—Spike Jones, bandleader, is best known as a madcap musician but California state unemployment insurance officials now know him as an able business man also.

Jones—real name, Lindley A.—has proven himself no slouch in tax matters.

The state department of employment ruled that orchestra leaders are responsible for paying the employer's share of their musicians' unemployment insurance tax.

Jones protested a bill from the state for back taxes under the ruling, but he paid in full and took his objections to the department's appeals board.

The board agreed with Spike's reasoning that the back taxes were uncalled for under the ruling in effect for the period involved. The board directed the return of the protested $1,207 payment to the leader of the City Slickers.
