Two Penniless Nuns Find America Land of Kindness

By Phil Spahn
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Bethlehem, Conn. (AP)—Two penniless nuns, their hearts filled with faith and prayer, pulled up their roots in France and overcame seemingly impossible odds to bring a bit of the old monastic world to this country.

On top of Bird's Eye View hill, about 10 miles from Waterbury, amidst the rolling terrain of the town of Bethlehem, a monastery for Benedictine nuns of the Strict Observance, the only one of its kind in the United States, stands as a monument to this faith.

The story of the monastery, which gives comfort to all rich or poor, Catholic, Protestant and Jew—is the story of two nuns—soft spoken Mother Benedict Duss, a native American, and Donna Marie Aline, who were hunted by the Nazis during the war.

The nuns feel that all the good things which have happened to them since their arrival in Connecticut three years ago, including donations of land and money for their abbey, have been miracles of St. Benedict, who founded their order 14 centuries ago.

Abbey in Prospect

The monastery is now the home of many nuns, but thousands of dollars are yet needed to complete Regina Laudis abbey (the Abbey of the Queen of Praise). There is no doubt in the hearts of the two founders that one day will rise on Bethlehem hill a full monastery, much like the abbey in Mieux, France, from whence they came.

Mother Benedict joined the contemplative order the day after she received her medical degree from the Sorbonne in Paris. She was born in Pittsburgh, but spent most of her life in France. At the war's end, after keeping one step ahead of the Gestapo, Mother Benedict promised herself to found a monastery in the land of her birth.

After surmounting many obstacles, such as obtaining permission from the process of the abbey and high church officials in Rome, Mother Benedict and Donna Marie Aline set out for America. Through the aid of a Waterbury priest they met in France, they were introduced to two Bethlehem residents who offered them shelter.

Practical Helps

Arriving penniless but undaunted, the nuns met a retired industrialist who became interested in their mission. Robert Leather, a Protestant, offered Mother Benedict and her companion 60 acres of rolling land as a starter.

Finding it difficult to believe such generosity, Mother Benedict and Donna Marie went to the top of the hill which was to become a monastery and there beneath a small fir tree buried a medal of St. Benedict and marked the spot with stones in the form of a cross.

Then things began to pop. Two unexpected sources each contributed $10,000. Others donated a heating system, while still others offered furniture and help.

Now, behind the high wall which surrounds their monastery, the nuns and postulants till the fields, milk cows and feed chickens. Others weave, make ceramics and sketch. Their day begins at 2 a.m. and is interspersed with prayer.
