

Textile Strike Situation Worse

Boston, Feb. 21 (AP)—The five-day-old strike of some 70,000 CIO woolen and worsted workers threatened to spread today to 470 cotton and rayon mills throughout the nation.

Officials of the Textile Workers Union of America last night called on 200,000 cotton and rayon workers to walk out March 15 unless management meets demands for a 12 per cent wage increase and other benefits.

Union president Emil Rieve, who stopped production at midnight Thursday at 150 textile plants to support demands for a 15-cent-hourly wage increase, a $100-a-month pension plan and other benefits, said cotton and rayon locals had been instructed to prepare for the threatened strike.

He said the instructions were sent out with the approval of the union policy committee for the cotton and rayon industries.

Rieve said the union represented cotton and rayon workers in more than 470 mills with about 110,000 workers in the northern part of the nation and about 90,000 in the south.

Wage talks with northern mills, whose contracts with the union expire March 15, will begin here Friday, Rieve said. Negotiations with individual southern mills, whose wage agreements have no uniform expiration date, have been in progress for some time.

The union set present hourly earnings in the cotton and rayon industry at $1.21 in the south and $1.31 in the north. It said establishment of minimum standard job rates would mean increases of more than 12 per cent for many southern workers.
