

Greyhound Buses Roll on Schedule Following Strike

PORTLAND, May 21 (AP)—Pacific and Northwest Greyhound lines resumed normal service Wednesday in the Pacific Northwest as attempts were made to find new settlements of the region's labor disputes.

Late Tuesday, the AFL bus employees union completed balloting on a proposed settlement of their strike against Northwest Greyhound and the company said members had accepted a new agreement.

William Phipps, Portland superintendent for Northwest, said service would be resumed from the local depot at 8:15 a.m. with the departure of the Yakima and Spokane bus.

Federal mediators and Overland Federal held conferences with the union and operators on proposals to settle along the same lines as brought about peace in the Pacific and Northwest Greyhound disputes.

Plans for Water System Offered

MADRAS, May 21—James Howland of the Corvallis firm of consulting engineers, Howland, Hayes and Merrifield, has proposed to the city of Madras and the Deschutes Valley Water district plans for a proposed domestic water supply, which would be administered under joint ownership of the municipality and district and would cost $767,000. It is proposed that the district bear 60 per cent of the cost and the city 40 per cent.

The water district currently supplies domestic water to settlers of the 50,000-acre North Unit reclamation project and the towns of Culver and Metolius and sells water to the city of Madras for its municipal system. It is proposed to take over a pumping plant, owned by Earl Thompson, which lifts water from Opal springs, deep in the gorge of Crooked river at the south edge of Jefferson county, to a rimside reservoir where it is purchased wholesale by the water district.

The U. S. bureau of reclamation has been giving intensive study to a proposed development of an extensive domestic water system for serving all of the North Unit project and the municipalities within it. A congressional bill for authorization of the bureau project has been prepared by Representative Lowell Stockman. The bureau project's cost would run to $3,000,000.

Nations Embark on Voyage To Uncharted Land Monday

By PHIL NEWSOM (United Press Foreign Analyst)

When the United States, Great Britain, France and the representatives of the West German Bonn government sign their peace contract Monday they will dot the "I's" and cross the "T's" of a situation unprecedented in world history.

It marks the beginning of a voyage of world diplomacy to an uncharted land not even imagined seven years ago.

It is the direct result of the hot and cold wars between East and West, and a bloodier example of the same thing may be found in Korea.

It is simply part of the move and counter-move in the struggle between two great, undefeated coalitions. That the Koreans and the Germans found themselves in between is unfortunate for them.

The situation leading to next Monday's ceremony had its beginning seven years ago when the victorious Allies of World War II divided Germany into four parts—one occupied by the Russians and the other three by the U. S., Britain and France respectively.

It was, of course, tragic that a new struggle sprang immediately from the still-smouldering ashes of the old. While the Western Allies granted new freedoms in Asia and attempted to rebuild Western Europe, Russia plotted to rush into the power vacuum to establish herself as a world conqueror.

To establish that power, it was necessary that Russia have both the manpower and the industrial capacity of all Germany and not just the eastern sector which she occupied.

Under it, West Germany achieves freedom, yet is not wholly free; and independence, yet is not wholly independent. It is a peace which is not a peace but the closest that can be devised in the face of Communist aggression.

A half million Allied troops will remain to see that a defenseless West Germany is not gobbled up by the Communists by force, and certain restricting regulations will make sure that she adheres to her agreement with the West.

Besides those two main provisions, the six-point contract which has been more than a year in the making also includes: An overall statement of aims, which eventually would mean a completely unified Germany; an act and interests treaty which guarantees a continuation of the trust-busting program and restitution to victims of Nazism; the financial treaty covering division of the German defense budget between Allied troops, and the new 12-division German Army; the arbitration tribunal to settle future German-Allied disputes; and the Berlin protocol which continues four-power control of Berlin but gives the German administration as much freedom as possible.

Overall, it is the bravest attempt yet at the beginning of a free, unified Europe—a condition achieved partially only three times before and then by force. Charlemagne almost did it. Then came Napoleon, and finally, Hitler.

Takes His Blaze To Fire Station

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., May 21 (AP)—Policeman Robert Schaefer stopped motorist Charles Schultz to give him a ticket Tuesday for driving the wrong way on a one-way street.

"My car is on fire and I'm heading for the fire station," Schultz said.

"Take off," Schultz said and Schultz drove down to the firehouse four blocks away.

Crook Budgets Win Approval

The special election was necessary because the elementary school budget was in excess of the constitutional limits by $170,867.09 and that of the high school by $91,168.35. Respective excesses last year were $180,581 and $125,977.60.

British Business Concerns In China Throw in Towel

(By United Press)

British business concerns in China are throwing in the towel.

The first result is that they will abandon assets valued unofficially at nearly one billion dollars. The final result may spread well beyond the borders of Red China, and in fact become world-wide.

The news must have sent a shiver of apprehension through Hong Kong, the British crown colony standing at the gateway to China.

It must have caused serious discussion in Tokyo where it would be realized that the diversion of British commercial energies from China would give the Japanese serious competition in the markets of Thailand, Indo-China, Indonesia, Burma and India.

It must have brought a grim victory smile in Moscow and Peking.

Conversely, it could bring about even closer cooperation between the United States and Britain in Asia.

In Britain itself it could foreshadow an even greater cleavage between the Conservative forces of Prime Minister Winston Churchill and the left-wing Laborites led by Aneurin Bevan who have favored close relations with the Communist countries.

At any rate, British business has found out the hard way that a free enterprise system cannot operate under Communist rules.

So the British will salvage what they can and get out, abandoning 100 years of effort.

What they get out with won't be much.

The Communists have another neat system for taking over what ever is left after their confiscatory taxes.

They will demand virtual ransom for the release of some 700 or so Britons still remaining inside China.

The ransom will come in the form of fines for various "violations" such as tax evasion, failure to declare assets, or illegal sales, or in demands for vast sums to be paid former employees.

Two considerations undoubtedly gave the British businessmen reason finally for accepting their hard decision.

One was that despite diplomatic recognition of Red China, the British government has been forced to accept one insult after another from the Chinese Reds and has not been able to provide protection for British investments
