the major factor in providing good service, at reasonable rates.

Many Jobs Provided The trucking industry has achieved its present position in Oregon because the people have demanded this type of service, the speaker said, adding that some 81,000 people now are employed by the industry in this state. He estimated that 75 per cent of all logging in the Central Oregon area is done by truck.

The speaker also disputed the contention of some highway engineers that the cost of roads adequate for use by heavy trucks is 50 per cent greater than it would be if only light vehicular traffic were involved. Actually, Trask declared, highways now are being built to the same general specifications, regardless of the type of traffic to be accommodated.

Evadon Held Widespread

Tax evasion in the trucking industry is widespread, under the weight-mile system, Trask said. He admitted that responsible long-haul lines are subject to more rigid checks, and thus are forced to bear a larger proportionate share of the tax burden than the shorter haul operators.

Questions Answered In answer to questions, Trask said that the Oregon Highway Council is largely financed by small truck operators, rather than big outfits, and that pre-election advertising will be prepared and placed by a Portland advertising agency, and not one from outside the state.

Trask also contended that the trucking industry would pay just as much or more, under such a registration and gas tax setup, as it does now, but that tax evasion by irresponsible or dishonest operators would be eliminated.
