

Red Strategists Sometimes Get Tangled in Typewriters

By BILL NEWSOM
(United Press Foreign News Editor)

The "big lie" is a recognized propaganda trick used effectively by the Nazis' late and unlamented Dr. Joseph Goebbels and today by the Kremlin promoters.

But once in awhile these Commie strategists get tangled in their own typewriters.

Such has been one of the effects of the recent Prague "purge" trials in which 11 out of 14 defendants were of Jewish origin.

On the one hand, in their broadcasts to the Arab nations, the Reds used the Prague "purge" as proof of the dangers of Zionism to the Arab states.

They also made much of Czechoslovakia's demand for the recall of the Israeli minister on the charge that he was linked to a Western espionage ring.

What these propagandists didn't count on was the effect inside the party and among the fellow-travelers of Western Europe.

Nor had they realized that the anti-Jewish character of the Prague trial would knock the props from under the Communist-sponsored world-wide campaign for the relief of the convicted American atom spies, Esther and Julius Rosenberg.

The Rosenberg case was being presented as a classic of anti-Semitism.

Now the Reds are in a desperate scramble to prove there was nothing anti-Semitic in the Prague trials after all.

Their efforts have not been successful.

London reports say the anti-Semitic nature of the Prague trials struck a more damaging blow to the British Communist party than any of the earlier purges in Eastern Europe and that the party is suffering both from a loss of membership and money.

One who left the party after publicly expressing his "revulsion" over the Prague trials was Benjamin Frankel, composer and conductor who had been a party member for 12 years.

Another effect has been to accelerate the decline of the London

Daily Worker, whose circulation now is down to about 30,000.

In Belgium, party Secretary Edgar Lalmand admitted the Prague trial had caused "uneasiness" among Communists, but said these were "ideologically undeveloped" and should be suspected of being "capitalistic spies."

In Denmark, Communist party member Anders Doessing, son of the late Danish minister to Moscow, criticized Communist attempts to "explain" the Prague trials. The official Danish Communist party organ promptly labeled him a "Titoist."

In Italy, the Communist press tried to lessen the impact of the Prague trials by running several pro-Jewish stories.

Throughout Western Europe, the Communist press currently is carrying statements purporting to emanate from Jews defending the policies of the Czech government.

However, not one of these statements has come from responsible Western Jewish organizations or personalities.

Horse's Broken Jaw Is Repaired

PAINESVILLE, O. — Horsemen here believe E. K. Bulkeley's broken jaw repair of a pacer, Buddy G., may be the only one of its kind on record.

The three-year-old harness horse stumbled while training. The fall caused Buddy G. to mash in the front of his jaw.

Dr. Bulkeley, a veterinarian, performed a complicated, four and one-half hour operation wherein he fastened special metal splints on the horse's battered jawbone. It is that feature of the repair that is considered unique.

Buddy G., now recuperating, is tethered in a box stall to keep him from rubbing his nose against the sides. His hay is suspended in a canvas sling to prevent possible injury to the healing bones.

ON THE TAKE
VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass. (U.P.) — A goat in this town is apparently all mixed up on the adage that it's better to give than to receive. Paul Maciel discovered the animal in his sleeping child's bed after it had helped itself to the milk in the baby's bottle.
