Board Favoring Private Power For Atomic Use

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22 (AP)—The National Security Resources Board recommended Monday enactment of legislation to encourage private industrial production of electric power from atomic energy.

The board made the proposal in a report to President Truman on how to carry out long-term resources policies proposed earlier this year by the President's Materials Policy Commission. The commission, headed by William C. Paley, board chairman of the Columbia Broadcasting System, made a series of recommendations on how to provide enough materials to meet the demands of the nation's expanding economy.

Greatest Speed
The commission had suggested that the present cooperative arrangements between the Atomic Energy Commission and private industry for developing atomic power be continued. It said this work should be pushed at the greatest speed permitted by defense demands.

The NSRB took the commission's suggestion a step further and recommended that the atomic energy act be revised to remove handicaps now preventing big scale entry of private industry into the atomic power field.

The AEC favors such a revision and Congress, too, is expected to consider it sympathetically next year.

The board noted that industry's interest in present participating in atomic power development "is retarded by uncertainties as to how it would be permitted to use its results."

Recommendations Made
The NSRB recommended that the President propose to Congress an amendment to the atomic energy act "specifying the conditions"—including patent rights, availability of fissible materials, and allocation of costs between industrial power and weapons—"under which private interests could benefit from their atomic power research, development, and production."

The board agreed with an assertion of the President's commission that the free world need not run short of raw materials as long as a vigorous program is pushed to develop and utilize resources.

Other recommendations included congressional authorization of U. S. participation in the St. Lawrence Seaway and power project, and provision of funds to advance multiple-purpose river projects, particularly in the St. Lawrence, Niagara and Columbia River areas.
