Blow Up Cities?

Geo. N. Taylor
The "H" bomb of today equals millions of tons of dynamite in explosive power. One such bomb would turn New York City into dust and flame in an instant. Stores, docks, factories, office buildings, homes and people would be mere bursts of flame or float away as dust.

Contrast — One: God's love that gave Christ, His only-born Son, to die for us. Two: Christ arose from death and the grave to give us hope and cheer that this world cannot know. Three: Judgment Day is out for the saved since Christ died for them and blotted out their sins. Four: Resurrection, glory and eternal life. Five: But you must receive Christ into your heart and trust in Him always. He will never leave you nor forsake you. See Hebrews 1:13.5. This message is by a Hillsboro nurseryman.

FAMILY MATTER—At first glance the theme of this sculpture might escape the observer, but its title, "Family Going for a Walk," makes it clear. Created by Armitage, the sculpture is on exhibit in London, England's, Holland Park.

Arms Shipment Put Spotlight On Guatemala

By CHARLES M. MCANN
United Press Staff Correspondent

Most Americans really woke up only one month ago to the fact that Communism has a dangerous foothold within two hours flying time of the Panama Canal and within three hours of the Texas oil fields.

Guatemala had long been dismissed as just one of the little "banana republics" of Central America.

Occasional dispatches told of the influence of a numerically tiny Communist Party over its government.

But it was not until the disclosure that a shipment of 2,000 tons of arms from behind the Iron Curtain had been landed at a Guatemalan port that the situation really hit the headlines.

The State Department had been aware for a long time that Guatemala was a danger spot.

It became plain soon after the inauguration of President Jacobo Arbenz and Gusman in 1951 that his administration would be anti-American.

U.S. Soon Convinced

The State Department soon became convinced, too, that the Guatemalan Communist Party, with only about 3,000 card-carrying members, exerted strong influence, if not domination, over the government.

But little Guatemala, about the size of Tennessee or Ohio, with a population of 2,800,000, is a sovereign country and U. S. action was difficult.

The arms shipment brought the situation to a head. A Pan-American conference on Guatemala, which probably will be held late this month, was organized to discuss a plan of action.

Then the United States resorted to the unprecedented step of asking foreign countries to permit in peace time search of their vessels which might be taking arms to Guatemala.

Now the situation has erupted in a revolt led from outside the country by Guatemalan political refugees.

Colonel Heads Revolt

Leader of the revolt is Col. Carlos Castillo Armas, 39, a career army man. He has made his headquarters in Honduras, Guatemala's neighbor on the canal side of the central American isthmus, since he escaped the country in 1951. He had led a small revolt during the election which made Arbenz president.

Castillo Armas attended the United States Army school at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. He is regarded as friendly to this country.

President Arbenz Gusman is a pronounced leftist though not a Communist, and he has been consistently anti-American in his policies.

He was assured the presidential election when his chief opponent was assassinated in an ambush. At 37, he became the youngest of the American republic presidents.

Whatever happens in Guatemala in the immediate future, it may be taken for granted that the United States will not rest until Red influence in Guatemala has been eliminated.

Ramsay MacDonald Blazed Trail Of 'Primes' to U. S. Back in '29

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON (UP)—A few old timers will be around when Sir Winston Churchill comes here this week whose memories go back 25 years when a British prime minister first came to Washington to meet with a president of the United States. Results of such meetings in times of peace more often than not have disappointed all concerned.

Back in 1929 Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald blazed the disappointing trail.

Like Churchill now, MacDonald came here to join in an effort to divert the world from disaster. The effort failed. Herbert Hoover was MacDonald's host and partner in a mighty effort to obtain further guarantees of world peace and naval disarmament.

Returned in 1933

MacDonald returned to Washington at the invitation of former President Roosevelt in April, 1933, to discuss the vast field of world economics and the forthcoming world monetary and economic conference that was shortly to convene in London. He and FDR issued a rosy-hued joint statement. There has not been in modern history a more colossal bust than that London conference.

In December, 1941, began the inspiring and fruitful wartime meetings between Churchill, FDR and, on occasion, the late Josef V. Stalin and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek. These wartime huddles forged the plans and policies of victory. But the Roosevelt-Churchill luck began to run out toward the end of the war at Yalta. At the Potsdam Conference among former President Truman, Churchill and Stalin after Germany was whipped, the Western powers were thrown for a loss.

Prime Minister Clement Attlee hurried to Washington when Mr. Truman was in the White House to assure himself that the President was not about to let go in Korea with an atomic bomb. There was no substantial reason for his anxiety and no substantial result from his visit.

The top level U.S.-British-French meeting in Bermuda last year produced little. Churchill then and likely now wanted the Soviet Union included in a Big Four conference among the heads of state. The old man began plugging for such a meeting more than a year ago although he publicly conceded last November that such might make matters worse instead of better.

SALEM, N.H. (UP)—When asked why he had not used the 30-foot awning over his market window this year Joseph Low replied: "Can't — just had a baby." A family of sparrows had built a best in the awning. Low explained, and it was a bit too early to ask them to vacate.
