Times Predicts Democratic Win

NEW YORK (UP) -The New

NEW YORK (UP) —The New York Times said yesterday that its pre-election survey of 47 states in dicated sufficient Democratic gains to control the House. There will be a tight battle for the Senate.

The survey showed Democratic hand in key races which will determine party control of the next Congress but margins were reported to be "perilously close and still subject to change" in many states. The New York Times warned that latest reports were subject to change if an unexpectedly large vote developed because of election enthusiasm in the final days of the campaigns.

The soundings were completed last Friday before President Eisenhower began his "get out and vote" telephone campaign and before his whirlwind tour of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Delaware.

The survey said that trend, unless it is reversed, was clearly Democratic as of last Friday and was not confined to any single region.
