Boy Builds Model Of Space Port

GUTHRIE, Okla. — (UP) — Many boys and their dads will thrill to new electric trains this Christmas, but the most elaborate railroad outfit probably would not impress 16-year-old Noel Noble.

Noel, son of Police Capt. Charles Noble, has his own space port, an amazing miniature conception of what some day may become a method of living in outer space.

Young Noble carefully assembled the finely detailed layout in his basement in eight months of painstaking spare-time work. He used such items as miniature salt cartons, 22 caliber shells and carbon dioxide cartridges in designing "gravity generators," a "mercury vapor power plant" and "interstellar ventilation units."

The 30 x 60-inch model is no haphazard attempt at a new toy. The young hobbyist based his miniature plant on research of space travel and related data gleaned from books from scientific authorities on the subject. Noble admits he also reads a good deal of science fiction.

All parts of the space port are worked out in minutest detail. Miniature washrooms contain tiny bars of soap in midjet lavatories, and there is even soapuds in the bathtub.

Also A Chapel

There are miniature telephones on the walls, one-half-inch coat hangers, darts on a dartboard and playing cards on the table in the game room.

Noble apparently does not believe space living will affect long-standing habits of human beings. Tiny labels on products in the kitchen cabinet blare forth the super-sonic praises of food and house-hold goods. And Noble has even provided pin-ups in the bunk room. Nobel showed his belief that space-dwellers will not forget God by building a small chapel complete with crucifix, candles and pews.

He also diagrammed floor plans for many of the rooms, drew up a complete roster of 200 men and women to occupy the space port and worked out oxygen and water requirements by day, week and month.

As to his opinion when such complexities will be everyday living considerations, the youth said, "I think maybe in 50 years we can do it."

Cozy Hollow Bridge Missing

BEMUS POINT, N.Y. — (UP) — A bridge created a problem for officials of the town of Ellery.

A government surveyor studying creeks and roads was unable to locate the Cozy Hollow bridge listed in a township map.

Finally town police discovered the bridge's steel framework on the shore of Chautauqua Lake where someone apparently had planned to use it in constructing a ramp to haul boats from the water.

The bridge had been closed for had not been abandoned by the township. If police catch up with the thieves—and if a value more than $100 is placed on the bridge—the culprits will face a grand larceny charge.

NEVER PUT OFF, ETC.
LOCKPORT, N. Y. — (UP) — Brought into court when his automobile rammed through a guard rail and a passenger was injured, motorist Robert J. Martin, 33, admitted he had lacked an operator's licence since 1952 because he kept "putting it off."
