Existence of Other Worlds May Be Proved by Science

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Man may be on the verge of proving that other worlds exist in space beyond the solar system.

Dr. Helen S. Hogg, astronomer of the National Science Foundation, told the United Press that this could well be "one of the great scientific events" of the coming decade.

She said at least two observations are establishing evidence for "gravitational proof" that the nearer stars possess planets like those, the Earth among them, which swing endlessly around the Sun.

Most modern astronomers believe there must be in the universe millions, perhaps billions, of life-bearing worlds similar to the Earth. But even the nearest presumably would be far too tiny and too dim to be viewed directly by even the greatest telescopes now in existence.

Question Asked

Assuming science does establish gravitational proof of planets outside the Sun's system, will man ever perfect the means actually to see them? The United Press put the question to Hogg and some others who have thought about the difficulties involved. Their comments follow:

Gogg: "That will be quite an order." Atmospheric turbulence is the big obstacle now. But suppose the rocket men succeed in setting up a space laboratory outside the atmosphere? In that event "there would be some wonderful discoveries."

Prof. George Gamow of George Washington University: "There is very little hope (of seeing other worlds) with the instruments we have now. But nothing is impossible."

Astronomer Francis P. Scott of the Naval Observatory: "If I said 'no' some smart fellow would come along and do it."

Look To Moon

Benjamin Adelman of the National Capital Astronomers: "It might be possible if we could establish an observatory on the Moon."

A new statement of theoretical reasons for belief in "other worlds than ours" appears in the current Atlantic Monthly. It was written by Donald H. Menzel, director of the Harvard Observatory. He believes that "life, even human or superhuman life, may exist in millions of places in the universe."

As of now, however, about all that astronomy hopes to prove in the reasonably near future is that there are other planetary systems in the regions of space closest to the Sun.

Stored Spuds Sans Sprouts?

ITHACA, N. Y. (UP)—A Cornell University potato specialist says atomic waste material may someday give us spuds that will stay sproutless in storage for several months.

Dr. Ora Smith said that research at Brookhaven National Laboratory has shown that irradiation of gamma rays from atomic waste—while it's an expensive control method—does keep potatoes from sprouting.
