

Daylilies Offer Real Delight With Little Work, Attention

THE AMATEUR GARDENER
(In the following article, one of a series prepared by the Bend Garden Club, the care and cultivation of daylilies is discussed. This is the third in series, which will appear throughout the 1957 garden season.)

By DORIS M. SCHNUR
(Bend Garden Club)

Daylilies were among the first flowers brought to America, and for real delight there is no present day flower that gives as much pleasure to the gardener for so little work or attention. These lovelies adapt themselves to practically any soil and climatic conditions and will grow in either sun or shade. It is sometimes said, not quite correctly, that Daylilies are free from pests.

The Hemerocallis of today has been developed since 1830, and there are probably as many as 100,000 hybrids produced each year. In this short time such marvelous advances have been made that we can obtain them now in colors, sizes and shapes that are truly remarkable. In addition to the common shades of yellow, variegated, pinks, purples, reds, raspberries, browns, and purples, and in selfs, bicolors and multi-color combinations.

The newest varieties in the unusual rose, pink, and purple may be quite expensive. However, there are thousands of standbys available that are very inexpensive. For those who have never grown Daylilies, a few well-recommended ones are: Hypocrite, a summer bloomer that grows 3 to 4 feet high with large canary yellow blossoms. This is one that is likely not to be surpassed for a long time. Another in the same class is Mikado. It is a dark orange lily with a mahogany red throat, 3 feet high, and blooms about the same time. A 4 foot variety is Golden West with waxy blooms of bright yellow. Rosalind, with rosy blooms, grows about 3 1/2 feet high; and Pink Charm, a longtime favorite, growing 4 feet tall, has flowers of a fully reflexed lily form in a dusky rose pink with light yellow centers. Another old one is Kekiwa. It has deep red starchy flowers on 40-inch stems.

The foliage of Daylilies is always graceful and effective, making the plants beautiful both before and after blooming. If chosen with blooming periods in mind Daylilies offer an opportunity for almost continuous bloom from spring into fall. The most versatile of plants, they can be used in many ways,—as accent plants, in front of shrubs, under trees, and with other perennials such as Iris, Peonies, and Delphiniums.

Once established, the Daylily produces fine flowers for many years with no need for division oftener than every five or six years. They may be planted either in spring or fall, with fall preferred in our area, usually in September or October. This gives the small plants time to set their roots before cold weather sets in, and possibly give some bloom the following summer. The second year will see considerable bloom, with their blooming peak actually coming in the third year.

Even though Daylilies can be planted and neglected with unusual results, their performance will be very much better with a little care. Lots of water, and a generous feeding each spring will accomplish wonders.

To give them a good start, the soil should be dug 18 to 24 inches deep and mixed well with a layer of compost, well-rotted manure, or peat moss, and a balanced fertilizer. A 2 or 3 inch layer of soil over the mixture gives ample room for setting the plants. Set on a little mound of dirt with the roots spread down and over the mound, the covering of soil should come no higher than it did at the nursery,—about an inch above the juncture of stems and roots. Level the soil around the plants and water thoroughly.

Because the roots grow near the surface, a mulch of peat moss, excelsior, or other light materials will prevent heaving from the first winter's freezing. Their own foliage will be sufficient mulch thereafter.
