

Change in Corporation Tax Formula Brings Industry

(The question of whether or not Oregon's tax structure hurts the attraction of new business to the state has been a hot one for several years. North Carolina had a tax problem, it discovered, states had a sales tax, but corporate tax structure was entirely revised along what is known as the "sound" lines. The North Carolina problem and its solution are discussed in the following article, written by the editor of the editorial page of the Wilmington, N. C., Star-News.)

WILMINGTON — The post-war industrial boom that swept the country from 1947 on was not as strongly in North Carolina as other states. As others were reporting per capita income increases,

North Carolina found itself beginning to sink lower and lower in the rating of states. Finally, when it hit the bottom by the Governor and was investigated the role North Carolina's tax structure played in industrial
