Weekend on TV features Nik and Dick talk show

By Fred Danzig UPI Staff Writer NEW YORK (UPI) — This is the year for so-called "talk shows" on TV. The three networks used some of their weekend time to run off a spectacular pilot film showing the newest talk show to bemuse their viewers.

This road version of keeping talking featured Dick and Nik, better known as Vice President Richard Nixon and Soviet Dictator Nikita Khrushchev respectively, in 16 minutes of absorbing give-and-take that originated at the American Exhibit's color TV studio in Moscow.

It wasn't exactly the Lincoln-Douglas debate, but it still was a fascinating human document. The very thought of these two important world figures haggling and exchanging clichés about their deeply-felt convictions made for an unprecedented, unforgettable TV show.

Diplomatic and political repercussions aside, this Dick-Nik TV show was stimulating, vivid and filled to the hilt with the immediacy of today's history. Surely Khrushchev, looking like a burlesque comic with his Panama hat and groovy hipster handshake, seemed to be having a ball during the impromptu powwow. Nixon, apparently uncertain about the propriety of arguing in public with his host, gamely tried to get the talk back on the subject of videotape and television.

Since it appears that Khrushchev enjoys ad libbing on TV, I'd like to book him into some future Groucho Marx Show and let Groucho handle him. Incidentally, I don't think it was intentional but CBS pre-empted a program called the last word to run off the tape on Sunday. As in the July 19 telecast of Russian and American track competition, the inevitable question arises about the talk show: Who won? I'd say the winner was the manufacturer of videotape, who started the whole thing.

Short Shots: Operation Noah's Ark on NBC-TV Sunday was an exciting and beautiful photographed documentary about the rescuing of wild animals from the Zambesi River in southern Rhodesia.

When it comes to smiling, teamster Boss James Hoffa makes Arthur Murray look like a Liberace. Or so it seemed when Hoffa appeared on CBS-TV's Face the Nation. Robert F. Kennedy, chief counsel to the Senate Rackets Committee, appearing on NBC's Meet The Press immediately following Hoffa's appearance, said he believed the CBS panel had agreed not to ask Hoffa any personal questions. This brought from Ted Ayres, producer of the CBS-TV show, the following rejoinder: "Ridiculous; there was no such agreement." Kennedy also was asked how he felt about Hoffa's threat to sue for libel because of Kennedy's comments on last Wednesday's Jack Paar Show. Kennedy repeated his comments and welcomed Hoffa's lawsuit. And so TV goes, weaving it self more deeply into the fabric of our life — when it feels like it. The Channel Swim: John Aaron and Jesse Zussmer have agreed to continue as independent producers for CBS and present a new version of Person to Person starting Friday, Oct. 2. Details of the new format and the choice of a new host to replace Edward R. Murrow will be announced shortly, their statement said.

Both CBS and NBC are going ahead with plans for special programs about the 1950's. The NBC-TV program, produced by Hubbell Robinson, is scheduled for Tuesday, Oct. 6. Leland Hayward's "The Fabulous Fifties" will be seen on Sunday, Jan. 17 over CBS-TV.

Richard Diamond, currently on CBS-TV Sunday night, moves to NBC-TV in the fall, replacing Buckskin on Monday nights. Dinah Shore's first two shows in the fall season, on Oct. 4 and 11, will originate in New York.

ABC-TV's new series, Adventures in Paradise, has lined up guest appearances by Ann Kasliff, Julie London, and Paulette Goddard, among others.

Blaze checked in Boise area

BOISE, Idaho (UPI) — A devastating range fire scorched 30,000 acres of sagebrush and blazed to within three miles of Boise before it was brought under control late Sunday.

While tired fire fighters were controlling the blaze, two smaller fires, one in the Silver City area and another near Mayfield between Boise and Mountain Home, taxed the efforts of other fire fighters.

Mopping-up operations were in progress in the Gowen Field area south of there where the range fire burned for approximately 24 hours and at one time threatened Boise.

Flames ate to the edge of Gowen Field, an Air National Guard base south of the city, and six C124 Globemasters of the 101st Airborne Division were flown out as a precautionary measure.

Two paratroopers were overcome with heat prostration while fighting the blaze Saturday. No other casualties were reported and no buildings were burned.

More than 1,000 airmen of the 34th Troop Carrier Wing of the Air Force Reserve and some 240 paratroopers of the 101st helped fight the fire. The 101st, from Ft. Campbell, Ky., was in Idaho for combat training with the reservists.

The fire was believed to have been man caused.

One-time queen of champagne set found dead

LONDON (UPI)—Brenda Dean Paul, socialite actress who was queen of the London-Paris champagne set in the roaring twenties, was found dead today in the bed of her shabby third-floor flat. She was 49.

The one-time blonde beauty known once as "Britain's bright young thing" began her reign when she was 16. But at 21 she was a convicted drug addict.

Doctors said she died of a heart attack. Near her bed, on a dresser, lay a supply of narcotics.

In 1933 Miss Paul wrote in a public letter: "To be forced for a whole lifetime to appear in court on charges of unpaid debts, to go to prison, at times to starve, and to best live on the grudging charity of a few loyal friends, is hell unimaginable."

The daughter of wealthy Sir Aubrey Dean Paul, she was 16 when she began whirling through international society and newspaper headlines.

Woman flier dies in crash

BOISE, Idaho (UPI)—A woman flier from California was killed Sunday when a plane piloted by her husband crashed on takeoff from an airstrip in a rugged Idaho area.

Mrs. Betty Haynes, last year's California Flying Farmer queen and a Powder Puff Derby contestant this year, was the victim.

Mrs. Haynes, Ar buckle, Calif., died from injuries suffered in the crash. Her husband, Joseph, and two other passengers, Mr. and Mrs. Leo R. Howe, also of Ar buckle, escaped with minor injuries.

The crash occurred early Sunday when the craft plunged to earth just as it was getting airborne at the Flying B Dude Ranch on the Middle Fork of the Salmon River.

Only access to the area is by plane or horseback. A Flying Farmer group from California, including those from Ar buckle, flew into the ranch last Friday for a weekend fishing holiday.

Mrs. Haynes finished 25th in this year's Powder Puff Derby.

Shortly after the shooting incident, Umpires Frank Guzzetta and Harry Schwartz ordered the game suspended with the score tied 44 in the 12th inning and telephoned a full report of the incident to Shaughnessy.
