Sweet Home boy is found dead

SWEET HOME (UPI)—A missing 15-year-old Sweet Home boy was found dead of a gunshot wound by his younger brother and a neighbor Wednesday afternoon. The victim was David Roger Smith who had been missing since Monday. The younger brother, Lawrence, and neighbor Clinton Bennett found the body about 2:30 p.m. about 300 feet behind his house. Sheriff George Miller of Linn County and District Attorney Courtney Johns said the death was either an accident or suicide. A .22 caliber rifle was found with the boy. He had been shot in the head. Officials said they did not suspect foul play, but were planning an autopsy.

Bar licenses to await census results

PORTLAND (UPI)—The Oregon Liquor Control Commission Wednesday stopped issuance of licenses for sellers of liquor over the bar until results of the 1960 population census are released. OLCC Chairman Hugh Kirkpatrick said the new census would be needed to determine if more licenses can be legally issued. He said the Commission believes the number of outstanding licenses permitting the selling of liquor by the glass now approaches the statutory limit.

Money obtained in drive will be used to finance next year's exchange student program at Bend High.

Oregon editors pay tribute to Sen. Richard Neuberger

By United Press International
Oregon newspapers today paid editorial tribute to Sen. Richard L. Neuberger who died Wednesday.

The Portland Oregonian, for whom Neuberger once worked as a youthful sports writer, referred to an editorial written by the late Philip H. Parrish, after Neuberger's 1954 election.

It began "someone—perhaps it was Woodrow Wilson—once observed that when a man goes to Washington, D. C., he either grows or swells."

The newspaper's editorial today said "it must now be recorded for posterity that Sen. Neuberger, in Washington, D. C., and in the hearts of his many personal friends, his loyal political supporters and his opponents in past political battles, did not swell. He grew. His stature as a senator and as a man became greater in each year of his service. He was well on his way to becoming a statesman."

Former Gov. Charles Sprague said in the Oregon Statesman that Neuberger "was a genuine liberal on matters of human welfare. He was moved by suffering and distress, and thought this great and rich nation should not hesitate to move to their relief." He said, "... for Richard Neuberger the epitaph should be: Distinguished journalist, conscientious legislator, ardent conservationist, able statesman."

The Eugene Register-Guard said "Dick Neuberger earned his way to greatness. Oregon's junior senator whose life ended abruptly... at the peak of his public career was not born to it, did not have it thrust upon him. He earned it every step of the way by hard work, devotion to duty, loyalty to friends and an abiding belief in certain principles. This was recognized even by those who considered themselves his political enemies."

The Medford Mail Tribune said "... and now just as his growing maturity was bringing him to what could have been his most useful and most influential years he is felled by a stroke brought in no small measure by the steady constant grind of work which sapped his strength and vigor. Richard Lewis Neuberger will go down in the state's history as one of the great public servants of this generation."

Oregon Journal — "Dick Neuberger will be remembered for his flashing mind, his restless energy, his widespread interest, his remarkable talent for research, analysis and communication. But influencing everything he did was his love and sympathy for and his understanding of his fellows, their hopes and problems. He could be militantly independent and tough minded in a fight for a principle. But he didn't want to hurt anyone personally, not even his severest critic... We consider that Neuberger has been an outstanding American and citizen of Oregon."

Plan for system of perimeter streets offered by city engineer

A major thoroughfare plan, proposed by city engineer John Eaton to the Bend street and water policy committee, last night, would provide Bend with a system of perimeter streets, allowing travelers to bypass the city in any direction if they didn't want to go through it.

The plan was presented as part of a general program in which, over a 20 year period, the city would pave all its unpaved streets and construct the perimeter streets.

The perimeter street, or belt proposed by Eaton is basically that presented by city planning consultant J. Haslett Bell in a 1956 report.

The perimeter street, or belt line, as Bell calls it, would circle the city in a gigantic square, outside the city limits and the other side of Pilot Butte. It would connect to arterial routes. Thus a driver coming, for instance, from the country southeast of town, and headed for Bachelor Butte, would not have to drive all the way downtown and then back out again.

Instead, he would catch the south belt line, skirt the city just north of the Brooks-Scanlon property, and join the Cascade Lakes highway.

This, said Eaton, would have the dual advantage of making driving easier for the tourists, and easing traffic congestion downtown. It would not do any harm to businesses, except perhaps a few specialized firms, he added.

The estimated cost of Eaton's proposed project is about $3 million. This breaks up to about $2 million for paving the estimated 30 miles of unpaved streets in the city, and $1 million for construction of the belt line and other arterial highways. This estimate takes into consideration the possibility of financing some of the work partly with state money.

On a 20 year basis, said Eaton, the city would probably have to raise at least $155,000 per year. Eaton suggested some ways for doing this.

One way, he said, would be getting more money from the state gas tax street fund.

"The cities of Oregon are being rapidly expanded," he said. Nearly half the population of Oregon lives in cities of over 2500, he said, yet they get less than ten per cent of the gas tax money.

He said that the state was spending too much money on highways, at the expense of city streets.

Another way to raise the money, said Eaton, would be a continuing levy. For this, the citizens of the city vote for a special millage rate for a specified length of time. This extra tax can then be collected over and above the limitations on normal taxation.

Another possibility Eaton proposed is a city gas tax. Many cities in the United States levy such a tax, he said. He saw no constitutional reason why it could not be done, and thought it equitable in that it lays the burden of street construction on the backs of those who use the streets.

Some committee members thought this last proposal might just drive gas stations out of town.

The committee spent some time after hearing Eaton's report in discussing city paving policy. Its next meeting, Monday at 7:30, will be devoted to a general discussion of city water policy.

Portland Demo William Murphy files for race

SALEM (UPI) — William B. Murphy, 41, Portland, an Oregon radio broadcaster, became the fifth person today to file for the U. S. senate in the Oregon primary.

He filed for the Democratic nomination.

Murphy, building an FM radio station in Portland, began his radio career prior to World War II at station KBND, Bend. He also is former program director at station KWLL, Albany, Ore.

Others who have filed for the Senate so far include Democrat Judge Harry C. Fowler, Crook county, and three Republicans, R. F. Cook and Lee C. Leslie, both of Silverton and George Altwater, Portland.
