Searchers pick over wreckage

TELL CITY, Ind. (UPI) — A man-made bomb, a freak of nature or high-speed stress on "fatigue metal" could have sent 63 plane crash victims to their deaths, investigators said today.
The answer lay in the tiny, shattered remnants of a Northwest Airlines Electra turbo-jet which disintegrated in the air Thursday and plunged 18,000 feet into a sodden farm field.
Federal aviation detectives and FBI agents pored over scraps of the shattered plane as a steam shovel pried them from the 30-foot crater plowed when the new $2,400,000 airliner fell to earth and exploded.
The investigators, organized by the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB), worked on three major theories:
—That a demented bomber blew the plane and its unsuspecting passengers and crew members to bits as they passed over southern Indiana on a Chicago-to-Miami flight.
—That violent air turbulence could have destroyed the craft, the first Electra purchased by Northwest and in service only seven months. Such turbulence was reported over southern Indiana at about the time of the crash.
—That the plane disintegrated through "metal fatigue," which has caused other crashes of high speed airliners.
The crash was the third Electra disaster in a little more than a year and the third unexplained crash in four months. It came within days of Washington hearings on the death of 34 persons in a National Airlines plane crash near Bolivia, N. C.
"Obviously, this plane broke up in the air," CAB spokesman Edward Slattery said. "It is too early to tell the cause of the tragedy, but we will investigate all possibilities, including a bomb."

De Gaulle comes under attack from all sides

PARIS (UPI) — President Charles de Gaulle was under attack from all sides of the French political scene today for refusing to call an emergency session of Parliament in defiance of a majority vote requesting it.
Parliament acted under one clause of De Gaulle's new constitution by getting 287 of the 551 deputies to approve the call for the session, which was to discuss the farm price crisis.
But De Gaulle acted under another clause which gives the president the power to veto such action.
Criticism came from the Communists, the Socialists, the Center, and from many of De Gaulle's own supporters.
Some deputies privately described De Gaulle's action as a "coup d'etat."
