New-found comet due to be scooped up by Big Dipper

By Phil F. Brogan
Bulletin Staff Writer

The Big Dipper, best-known of all starry configurations in the northern sky, is to scoop into its bowl later this spring a newly-discovered comet.

This comet, officially known as Comet 1959k, recently rounded the sun and is now a faint object in the morning sky. It was discovered late in 1959 by Robert Burnham, Jr., at Lowell Observatory, Flagstaff, Ariz.

Astronomers say the new comet is not expected to provide a spectacular show as it moves into the northern heavens later this month. But for amateurs it will be of special interest because it will pass through the bowl of the dipper and should be easy to locate.

Shortly after its course was worked out, Harvard astronomers estimated that the comet would attain a brilliancy of about the third magnitude. But there is a possibility it may be dimmer. However, it will be visible through small telescopes, binoculars and low-power opera glasses as it speeds through Draco, Ursa Minor and Ursa Major.

Sky gazers who have difficulty in locating the comet may have to wait until about May 5. On or about that date, if Harvard astronomers have correctly charted

Gregg to head Deschutes group

Glenn Gregg, Bend, will head the Deschutes County "Colleges for Oregon's Future, 1960-1970" committee. He has accepted the invitation of A. L. Strand, president of Oregon State College, to head the Deschutes group.

The committee, which will be composed of alumni and friends of all Oregon's public colleges, as well as representatives of the PTA, OEA, labor and others interested in higher education, is being formed at the request of John R. Richards, chancellor of the Oregon State System of Higher Education, to promote better understanding of the problems facing Oregon's public and private colleges during the next decade.

"Throughout the state similar committees are being formed in every county in the hope that we will be able to alert the citizens of Oregon to the crisis facing colleges here and throughout the United States — the fact that we must prepare for almost double enrollment within the next ten years," chancellor Richards said.

District court cases reported

Louis Glenn Rogerson, Bend, was fined $90 and $5 costs Wednesday in Deschutes county district court, for a log truck overload. The weighmaster charged that the load was 2400 pounds overweight.

A 1400-pound combination overload cost Elyel Archer, a trucker from Selah, Wash., a $28 fine and costs. He also appeared in district court Wednesday.

Also appearing in court Thursday were the following: Homer Emerson Nichols, Bend, operating a truck without a stop light, $2.00 fine; Melvin Leroy Rogerson, Bend, basic rule violation (60 in 30), $5 fine, suspended; Colen Orin Albright, Portland, passing with insufficient view, $5. Each paid $5 court costs.
