MARIJUANA: Revenue expectations foggy

They also estimated revenue of $18.4 million for 2015-2017 — approximately $766,000 per month.
 That's a misleading number. The collected amount could be millions higher. The estimate is what OLCC thinks it might actually have in hand to spend in the biennium, not what the state will collect.
 According to Rob Bovett, legal counsel for the Oregon Association of Counties and one of the writers for both Measure 91 and HB3400, nobody knows what we'll earn.
 "What will we collect? That's really anyone's guess," said Bovett in a telephone interview last week. "It will depend on how effective HB3400 is at suppressing the black market. If it's effective it will drive folks into the retail market where we'll collect revenues."
 Oregon has a robust, smoothly operating black market, Bovett said. And, some of the biggest illicit marijuana fields in the West are growing in southern Oregon.
 Will those growers and suppliers want to "go legit?" Although numerous news agencies have reported that formerly illegal growers in Washington have made the transition to legal growth and sale in that state, those growers have also been quoted as saying the cost of legal operation is so steep that they are struggling to see a significant profit.

 Furthermore, Bovett said, "Washington's state tax structure is entirely different than ours and I believe (legal marijuana) will sell for significantly less in Oregon than Washington."
 "Our tax structures are dramatically lower than that of Washington. We're going to have more supply, a higher grade of marijuana and a lower tax rate."
 All in all, Bovett said, "Comparing Washington to Oregon is apples and oranges. Colorado tax structure is overall closer to Oregon but we're still lower."
 So what's a county to do? The Chieftain took a poll of 16 Eastern Oregon counties and found that five had actually pulled the trigger on the opt-out opportunity, voting to ban marijuana sales in the county.
 Those counties are Umatilla (62.7 percent NO on Measure 91), Malheur (NO 68.7), Harney (NO 65.7), Baker (NO 59.5) and Crook (NO 58.6).
 Cities in those counties are still free to make their own decisions. As an example, although medical marijuana sales are allowed in Union County, Island City and Elgin have reportedly voted to deny all licensing within city limits.
 In Malheur County the City of Nyssa has followed the county's lead and opted out.

 In Wallowa County, the City of Enterprise has voted to approve medical marijuana dispensaries provided they meet with state requirements.
 "Because of where our schools are located, they are basically limited to two locations in Enterprise," said City Administrator Michele Young.
 The City of Joseph has adopted a zoning ordinance prohibiting dispensaries.
 The City of Wallowa "discussed it at their last meeting," according to City Recorder Carol Long. "The consensus between the council member and citizens in attendance was to opt out."
 The matter will be put to a vote at the Wallowa council's Oct. 20 meeting.

 Wallowa County Commissioners are taking a longer look at the issue, as are the commissioners in numerous other Eastern Oregon counties. They have until the end of December to decide.
