

Gifts for the Dog Lover

If your friend or family member spends more time speaking puppy than English, then it's official – you know a dog lover. This also means that you should probably consider giving this person at least one dog-related gift this Christmas.

Your friend will light up at your thoughtfulness, and their dog will thank you, too.

Treats

If a survey could be conducted asking dogs their favorite holiday gift, food would undoubtedly top the list. From the chewy shop-bought nuggets to the larger-than-life rawhide bones, there is a seemingly unlimited variety of special snacks for the pooch in your life.

A Check-Up

Trips to the veterinarian can add up in a hurry, so why not surprise the dog-lover in your life with a voucher for a free flea bath or grooming service for their pet? Most veterinarian clinics offer gift cards or coupons for their services, helping save your friend or family member some serious money for their dog's care.

For a little extra, you could even set up the appointment and offer to take the pup in for its treatment. This will save your friend both money and time – a double gift.

Dog Clothes

What's cuter than seeing a dog dressed up in a turtleneck? How about a dog dressed up in pajamas. Many specialty shops will have these options and more for styling your puppy in an adorable ensemble.

Fleece sleepers, fashionable sweaters and plush throws for comfortable couch lounging are also available at many stores. Go with a holiday theme on the pajamas so Fido can be dressed up like the family on Christmas morning.
