

THREE minutes with ...

GARRETT LOWE

Garrett Lowe of Wallowa came to the county in 2011 from Boise area where he was a fiber optic cable splicer. He brought that business with him and kept it until January 2016 when he and wife Beth purchased Timber Bronze 53. The couple also manages the Pacific Pride Fuel Plant for the Hendersons in Wallowa.

He'll have been married to Beth McCrea Lowe for 32 years in June. The pair raised five children.

Garrett serves on the Wallowa Union Railroad Authority board, has been a Wallowa City Council member for nearly six years, has been bishop of the Enterprise LDS Church for the last three years and is organizer for the Wallowa Hometown Project.

Q. Why come to Wallowa County and more specifically the town of Wallowa?

A. We've always wanted to come back here. We just had to figure out how to do it. Having a job to bring with us was the ticket. Our last daughter (of five) had just graduated, so everybody else was out of the house. We love the small-town feel, the way the town works, how they all work together somewhat. We'd like to see them work together more.

Beth's family has always been here, we think she's fifth-generation Wallowan, she's got cousins and aunts and uncles — our kids, all but one, live here now. We've always loved, loved this town.

Q. What has Wallowa taught you?

A. Patience. Patience. I was a manufacturer's representative (my wife says I got paid to eat and play golf) and I spliced fiber at the same time. You learn to do both — but when you do that your brain gets into the mode of 'I have to get it done and I have to do it now.' Coming here has slowed that down to where I have time to weigh the facts, look at more possibilities, and to think more about relationships — and that's been good.

Q. How has Wallowa County surprised you?

A. The people here realize that we have to make a switch. We don't necessarily have to change the way we are; the feel of the town or the feel of the county, that doesn't have to change. But our inner workings are going to have to change if we are going to survive. And I see huge numbers of people realizing that.
